

Chapter 1 : Any surprise decisions left for Philadelphia 76ers roster?

Surprises and Disappointments - Final December 18, With the season in the books, I would like to look back at the players that I thought gave us the most surprising seasons, and those who disappointed.

The NFL required teams to reach a man limit by yesterday afternoon, but the Patriots did them one better. After a wave of transactions, the Pats finished the day with 52 players. The most surprising moves: Third-year cornerback Cyrus Jones was waived. The team parted ways with veteran running back Mike Gillislee, as well. The Pats enter Week 1 with only three offensive tackles and three wide receivers. This could change, though. Tight end Ryan Izzo will reportedly be placed on injured reserve today, which means the Pats will soon have two open roster spots. They could, and probably should, address receiver and tackle with waiver-wire additions. A free agent addition this past spring, Hill separated himself immediately, carrying 11 times for 51 yards in the preseason opener against the Redskins. Once considered one of the best young backs in the league, Hill looked re-energized this summer. If Michel and Burkhead are unable to contribute early in the season, Hill could be in line for plus carries per game. White figures to see an expanded role, as well. Brandon Bolden was released, but could re-sign with the team soon. About a hundred receivers just hit waivers. Some intriguing names are available: Carroo was a third-round pick out of Rutgers. At 6 feet, pounds, Carroo is a well-built slot receiver. Miller is an electric athlete who also operates out of the slot. Wright is the most experienced of the group. He played five years with the Titans and enjoyed a 1, yard campaign in . If the Pats are looking for a receiver with punt return capabilities, Williams released by the Titans and Isaiah McKenzie waived by the Broncos could be options. Entering his second season, Hollister seems much better equipped to deal with the physicality of the NFL. He should complement Gronkowski well in two tight sets. His Week 1 status is worth monitoring. Izzo, the seventh-round pick out of Florida State, made the team, but will reportedly be placed on injured reserve. This will free up an additional spot on the roster. The Pats kept five throughout . The team also cut veteran Matt Tobin. Grissom and Davis are the surprises. A third-round pick in , Grissom was cut in each of the past two seasons and eventually worked his way from the practice squad to the active roster both years. He has practice squad eligibility. Marquis Flowers, who re-signed with the Pats this offseason, was a slightly surprising cut. Flowers seemingly lost his spot to Grigsby, a special teams stud with high-end athleticism. Jackson, Keion Crossen Lots of upside with this group. Dawson, the second-round pick out of Florida, missed the majority of August with a hamstring injury. He was moved from cornerback to free safety during the third game against the Panthers, and he remained in the latter position for the finale at the Giants. Perhaps the Pats view McCourty as an all-purpose backup. He can likely slide in at cornerback should anything happen to Gilmore or Rowe. Bojorquez played as many snaps as Bill Belichick in the preseason.

Season is only a few days ahead and teams are making big decisions on who's in and who's out. Decision Decision! Final cut that's surprise you. Aug 12,

After being compared to everything from "The Bachelor" to "Survivor," the conference is at least keeping people guessing. Monday press conference to announce the results of its discussion. The school presidents could choose to expand, either with full members or football-only members. They could stand pat with 10 schools, remaining the smallest - and perceived as the most vulnerable - of the "power five" conferences. Or they could prolong the suspense until December or sometime next year, the equivalent of a punt for the most offensive-minded of all conferences. The story indicated that no deal could be struck by Monday. Industry and school sources have pegged expansion chances at less than 50 percent. Asked if expansion was on life support, one source cautioned that he remembered a similar conversation at Big 12 football media days this year. Then the presidents authorized Commissioner Bob Bowlsby to begin contacting expansion candidates, leading to interviews with 11 finalists: They touted everything from academics and football success to civic backing and market size. Technically, the meeting is scheduled for Monday with Bowlsby and the presidents. Things may be far into the discussion by then. The presidents have a group dinner planned Sunday at which Bowlsby is expected to address the group. The search for common ground, if any, will begin then. Where do things stand? No potential school currently has the eight votes needed for membership. Sources indicate Oklahoma is opposed to expansion, outside of the possible exception of BYU, a favorite of Boren. On the surface, yes. The presidents know the candidates all too well. The data has been in their possession for months. So what could turn the tide? Or that by going through a process that included 18 teams - including 11 finalists - would look incredibly silly without an expansion resolution. If the Big 12 does expand, what are the most likely options? For full membership, it would probably be Houston and Cincinnati, long presumed to be the best candidates among the front-runners. But some schools have complained that by adding Houston, it will be even harder to recruit that part of Texas. What would football-only membership gain? It might be a compromise way to include BYU and get Oklahoma on board. Of course, the Big 12 would need another football-only member it goes that route. Houston would bring the most to the table from a football-only standpoint. By adding two for football, the Big 12 would avoid a strange situation where it plays a round-robin schedule followed by a championship game. Regardless of what happens, we should know something Monday, right? The Big 12 presidents could put off the decision, as noted. This Topic is Missing Your Voice.

Ever wonder how long it takes the PTAB to decide to institute trial? Ever have someone ask how long it will take for the Board to issue its final written decision? Of course, the maximum amount of time is fixed at 3 months to an institution decision and 12 months to a final decision. But an analysis of recent PTAB decisions reveals that the actual amount of time could be just 1 month and 9 months, respectively. The data sets consisted of IPR proceedings which reached a final decision on the merits through May 31, Table 1 provides some summary statistics. For ease of calculation, it was assumed that each month of the year had exactly 30 days. Thus, those proceedings in which the time interval between institution decision and final decision was days are expressed in these results as Table 2 provides some summary statistics for this set. Table 2 Chart 2 provides a frequency plot for this set. Accordingly, do not act upon this information without seeking counsel from a licensed attorney. Decision Decision! Final cut that's surprise you. I think many Blues fans are surprised that Kyrou seems to have made the final cut, and would have even without.

December 18, With the season in the books, I would like to look back at the players that I thought gave us the most surprising seasons, and those who disappointed. This is based purely on my expectations of these players coming into the season. Her pattern throughout most of the campaign was to play a couple of weeks and then take off a couple. She played in just 17 of 33 official tournaments. She was still playing quality golf, but her better days seemed to be behind her. This season she still only played in 17 events, but the results have been quite spectacular. Who would have thought that only two players would win 3 times on the LPGA tour, and she would be one of them? That win was her first major championship and we could finally forget that missed 16 inch putt that cost her the Kraft Nabisco Championship in . She not only has won twice this year, but her 8 top five finishes are just one behind the league leaders. She finished 39 on the money list in , and all the way up to 7 this year. I know she is still chasing that first LPGA win, but we all know it is coming soon. Moriya had 6 top five finishes, 11 top tens, and led the tour with 22 top twenty-fives. She only missed one cut the entire season. She moved up from 40 last year to 9 on the money list. She teased us from time to time with some stellar play, but she came into this year as an underachiever. This year has changed all that. She had four top five finishes, and has improved her money list standing from 36 in to 17 this year. She has turned it all around this year. Michelle posted 6 top five finishes and eight top tens. Last year she finished on the money list, this year she jumps way up to . She finished the season with 2 top five finishes, 6 top tens, and a healthy 15 top twenty-fives. I guess we can all say she was successful beyond our wildest expectations, as she shared the Player of the Year honors with So Yeon Ryu. Oh yes, she also won the official money title. Lydia had 4 victories in , but failed to win a single tournament in . Last year she was 2 on the year end money list, this year she finished . She started the year at 1 in the Rolex Rankings and has fallen all the way down to 9. In 25 starts she has managed just 1 top ten finish. Last year she finished 9 on the money list, this year she fell to . In 22 starts this year she managed only a single top 10 finish. The only reason she is retaining her full time playing privileges for the season, was that she finished 3rd in her next to last tournament of the season. That said, this very popular player will get another chance to show she has something left in the tank in the upcoming season. She dropped this year from 34 to 91 on the year end money list. In 28 starts this year she only had 1 top ten finish. Last year she finished 25 on the year end money list, this year she fell to . What is a surprise is that she had just 2 top twenty-five finishes in 20 starts. She also missed the cut 11 times. Her down year in still produced a year 55 on the money list. This year she finished ! In fact, in her last 13 starts she failed to produce a single top 20 finish. In she finished 38 on the money list, this year she fell all the way down to . What player had 7 top twenty-five finishes in , but did not have a single top ten?

Thank you to my readers for the favorites, follows, and reviews. Thank you to my beta, The Kinetic Violinist. This is another one of my favorite chapters. Both were exhausted from the journey from Coruscant. After their landing, the couple grabbed their belongings and went straight to bed. Because of the demons he had faced, Anakin Skywalker still found himself in the familiar state of little sleep. Many were things that had happened in the past. And yet here was about to have his own. What kind of father or role model could he be? And what if Luke and Leia They could never- would never find out. And some more recent events. And while some were familiar, they never exactly happened You killed me Anakin Skywalker. Anakin knew he had to stop or he would go absolutely crazy. Anakin wondered if it was the distance. Coruscant was in the Core. Naboo was in the Mid Rim, near the Outer Rim. Then again, that was probably crazy. Or maybe Anakin was simply crazy. He tried to think of the Jedi solution. Was the Light Side of the Force present, or stronger, here? Then again, was the Jedi way always right? No, so, probably not. Anakin shrugged it off. He did not know. After tossing and turning for more than two or three hours- he lost track- he got up and decided to assemble the crib, but in no time at all the crib was finished. So he thought why stop there? Excitement and a tingle of fear kept him from peaceful sleep. He put together the rocking chair, a toy chest, changing station, a small book shelf, and a few other things. In a matter of hours the room was finished. He was or had been trying to meditate. Right before they went off to Tatooine. So much had changed in those three short years. The Senator of Naboo would have seen it sooner, but had been on communications with the Queen and Governor Bibble. Apparently there was what the Governor of Theed described as, "an army" of paparazzi lined outside the Palace in Theed. And more importantly, answer their questions about the recent days. As Queen and now Senator The only time she had ever truly put herself first was when she married Anakin. While she had been up for an hour, she had been preoccupied with eating breakfast and making a discreet comm to Coruscant. To the private communications of Obi-Wan Kenobi. Even as she Queen she often made her final decisions alone. While she had advisers, such as Governor Bibble, and other beings, however in the end the final decision was hers. While most married being did such things throughout their marriage, she and Anakin made very few together because of Anakin or both of them were off world. Not to mention the fact that their relationship was a secret until recently. She could hear herself already saying, "If Obi-Wan and Master Yoda are suspended, the least we could do is offer them a place to stay. If he ever goes, the Order will too. Their lips met again. The thought and revelation of a second baby was unimaginable. It was an answer he had given to those asking similar questions out on the battlefields. Especially the battles seemed to be lost. Again, Anakin was only giving one of his General talks. He really truly did not know. Despite his title of Hero with No Fear, deep down Anakin was utterly petrified. Anakin never had a father. He had Obi-Wan and for a short time Qui-Gon, but until recently he thought of Palpatine as his father figure and it turned out that was all just lies. Still, Anakin supposed they should start with what the babies should need. But really, how much did they need? Few in the Outer Rim could afford to give their offspring half of the items in the nursery. Though Anakin supposed like his wife, he wanted to give his children everything. After we talk with your family today, we could go and buy another. No, they were not going anywhere, except to the med center, and that would be it. Anakin was puzzled for a moment. Though he supposed no system was immune to gossip. She knew what Anakin meant. What he was planning. Everything he had done, all the beings he had saved. The battles he had won. Including the very war itself. Even if they considered it," which they would not, "I am not going back. Still, did her husband not realize what he was doing? Throwing away his career? All his hard work? And I know you say none of that bothers you," She had said it and even yelled it during past arguments countless times, "but it should bother you. The list was unending. Why she had been so determined and careful to keep their marriage a secret. Why she encouraged and fought him every step of the way to continue his training. To stay in the Order. To continue being a Jedi, but Anakin smiled at here. He knew what she always thought. Though, he still told what she never liked to hear. Anakin caressed her face. Knowing that this was difficult for her. She looked into his eyes and nodded. They tightened their embrace and kissed one more time. Then they walked out the door and down the staircase. It was in my original ideas and drafts for a Nabberie story. Again, this chapter is happening around the time of Surprises, the original story that started it all. The subplot about Obi-Wan and Yoda being suspended is from Surprises: This chapter is also recurring more around the time of Surprises. Not next chapter, but the one after. What do you think? I was hoping to have more reviews by now. Your review has been posted.

Which of these players will learn that the team is parting ways? Breaking it down Well, we know that the team likely has plans to retain McAdoo on a Two-Way contract. Veteran players Emeka Okafor and Kris Humphries will likely seek playing time internationally. So that leaves a final roster spot and a Two-Way contract spot to fill from the three remaining players. Justin Anderson will likely be retained on the 15 man roster. So who gets a Two-way contract between Blackmon Jr. Each has sat a game. Neither has exploded with long chunks of playing time, nor undeniable production. So it will come down to subjective assessment. Pullen is a 27 year old point guard signed on September 22, But the team has made no effort to extend shooting guard Nik Stauskas , and only have J. Redick signed through this season. With two contributors ending their official relationship with the Philadelphia 76ers at the end of this year, I have to believe that the team is prepared to retain Blackmon Jr. The team feels as though the wings have the most variability this season, but also boast significant depth. The final game could hold the answer to this one. If Pullen shows up shooting from the perimeter, the decision could go another way. The roster was set very early fro this team. They got to 15 and stuck there for awhile. Now there is not much left to debate€!. Enjoy that last preseason game. On the other hand, I want to congratulate Jacob Pullen. Load Comments Top Stories.
