Background[edit] The series consists of episodes originally broadcast between and The first season was produced in black and white. It was introduced September 22, , as part of the Tuesday night lineup, but moved to Monday nights, an half hour earlier, the following January. Solo was supposed to have been the focus, but a scene featuring a Russian agent named Illya Kuryakin drew enthusiasm from the fans and the agents were paired. United Network Command for Law and Enforcement: Carroll played Alexander Waverly , an English head of the organization. Barbara Moore joined the cast as Lisa Rogers in the fourth season. THRUSH was considered so dangerous an organization that even governments who were ideologically opposed to each other – such as the United States and the Soviet Union – had cooperated in forming and operating the U. Similarly, when Solo and Kuryakin held opposing political views, the friction between them in the story was held to a minimum. Innocent character[edit] The creators decided an innocent character would be featured in each episode, giving the audience someone with whom to identify. List of The Man from U. At that time filming was underway for the Bond movie Goldfinger , in which Martin Benson was playing a supporting character named "Mr. The claim was the name "Solo" had been sold to them by Fleming, and Fleming could not again use it. Within five days Fleming had signed an affidavit that nothing in the Solo pilot infringed any of his Bond characters, but the threat of legal action resulted in a settlement in which the name Napoleon Solo could be kept but the title of the show had to change. The role of the head of U. Allison, played by Will Kuluva , rather than Mr. Waverly, played by Leo G. Revisions to some scenes were shot for television, including those needed to feature Leo G. The pilot episode was reedited to 50 minutes to fit a one-hour time slot, converted to black and white, and shown on television as "The Vulcan Affair". NBC in New York was not happy with the pilot. An executive wanted to drop the Russian character, Illya Kuryakin, from the cast, but he could not remember his name, saying "Kâ€” Kâ€”". When later asked who the replacement was, Felton replied, "Leo G. Felton explained he had replaced Kuluva, and that it was too late to get rid of McCallum, the contracts already having been signed. The extra scenes were reedited to tone down their sexuality, and then used in the regular series in the episode "The Four-Steps Affair". Beyond extra scenes for the feature film, and revised scenes shot and edits made for the television episode, there are other differences among the three versions of the story. World Aquanaut Security Patrol. Despite this, WASP was used by the feature film in Japan in late , and it was left in the American release in Another change among the three versions of the pilot story was the cover name for the character of Elaine May Donaldson. In the original pilot it was Elaine Van Nessen; in the television version and the feature version it was Elaine Van Every. With the popularity of the show and the spy craze, To Trap a Spy and the second U. Waverly in the series. Another entrance was through The Masque Club. Waverly had his own secret entrance. The episodes were largely filmed on the MGM back lot. The only exception was "Alexander the Greater Affair". Rolfe endeavored to make the implausible elements in the series seem not only feasible but entertaining. The Spy with My Face was the theatrical film version of this episode. In its first season The Man from U. During this time producer Norman Felton told Alan Caillou and several of the series writers to make the show more tongue in cheek. When Rolfe left the show at the conclusion of the first season, David Victor became the new showrunner. Over the next three seasons, five different show runners would supervise the U. It was renewed for a fourth season and an attempt was made to go back to serious storytelling, but the ratings never recovered and U. The Girl from U. The movie included a tribute to Ian Fleming via a cameo appearance by an unidentified secret agent with the initials "JB". The movie, written by Michael Sloan and directed by Ray Austin , briefly filled in the missing years. Solo and Kuryakin, who had retired, are recalled by U. Rather than reuniting the agents and recapturing their chemistry, however, the agents are separated and paired with younger agents. Like most similar reunion films, this production was considered a trial balloon for a possible new series which never materialized. Although some personnel from the original series were involved like composer Gerald Fried and director of photography Fred Koenekamp , the movie was not produced by MGM but by Michael Sloan Productions in association with Viacom Productions. Gerald Fried was composer from season two through the beginning of season four. The final composers were Robert Drasnin who also scored episodes of Mission: Impossible , as did Schifrin, Scharf, and Fried , Nelson Riddle whose score for the two-part episode "The Concrete Overcoat Affair" was so loathed by Norman Felton that he never hired the composer again, although the music did get tracked into other third-season episodes , and Richard Shores. Goldsmith, Stevens, and Scharf composed dramatic scores in the first season using brass, unusual time signatures and martial rhythms. Gerald Fried and Robert Drasnin opted for a lighter approach in the second, employing harpsichords and bongos. As a result, The Man from U. Shatner played a heroic civilian recruited for an U. The villain was portrayed by Werner Klemperer. Barbara Feldon played an U.
