It is commonly used in the Royal Australian Navy as a sign-off in written communication such as emails. It can be found in older newspaper letters to the editor, and often in US legal correspondence. Air Force , the U. Army , and the U. Navy call for two complimentary closings for letters: However, the Commander acknowledged that current regulations call for "Sincerely" and told students they were free to follow that practice. When writing official letters, general customs are: Chinese[ edit ] Valedictions in Chinese are highly variable and reflect the relative social status of the sender and recipient. They show a fair degree of variation, for example: Letters to dignitaries may use even more grandiose styles, such as: Prime Minister, to allow the expression of my most distinguished consideration. Prime Minister, the expression of my highest consideration. German[ edit ] Valedictions in German, while a lot less complex than those in French, are similarly flexible. The highly formal form Hochachtungsvoll lit. German valedictions also offer the possibility of adding your location, e. While this is no less formal, it does have a more "relaxed" feel to it. These valedictions are also often adapted to specific professions, states or political views. More familiar valedictions in German follow the same formula. It is possible in informal and rapid e-mail communication to sometimes use abbreviations of the forms, unlike in English. A popular form in Germany in recent years, hdl habe dich lieb, lit. The informal ones may use "kol toov" Hebrew: This is an American Jewish usage, rarely heard from native speakers of Hebrew. Indeed, the Talmud says: Very formal and now dated, means "I respectfully remain your servant ". Very formal, means "With regards". Somewhat formal, assumes existing relationship. Often used between colleagues. It literally means "Greetings". Very frequently used in e-mails among colleagues. Informal and somewhat intimate, means "kiss on the cheek". Often used within family and among friends, between or toward women. Intimate, it means "kiss on the mouth ". Mostly used between couples.
