, ? Russians use relatively few first names. Russians also use diminutives or nicknames. Each name typically has a version used by your best friend, another used by your other friends, another used by your teachers, another used by your grandmother, another used when you are scolded, etc. Word order is less important in Russian. Instead, meaning is conveyed by suffixes. This would be straightforward enough if there were simply one case for the subject of a sentence, and a second case for the object of the sentence. Instead, Russian has six cases, conveying such meanings as where you are vs. Nominative case[edit] The primary case, used for the subject of the sentence "Bob" , is called the nominative case. This is the case you find in dictionaries. Accusative case[edit] "Lunch" is the direct object of "Bob eats lunch. Inanimate masculine and neuter nouns in the accusative case are the same as nouns in the nominative case. Feminine nouns change their or ending to or , respectively. Prepositional case[edit] When a sentence contains a complement of location, the noun is in the prepositional case. In general, you add pronounced "yeh" to end of the word. Never write , instead write yes, Russians pronounce both, like "ee-ee". The other exception is foreign nouns ending in , , or . These look the same as the nominative case. Nouns in the prepositional case are always preceded by "in" or "about. If "in" is an activity, or a place where an activity is done for example, the ballet use pronounced "na". For other places, use pronounced "veh" or pronounced with the next word if it starts with a vowel, e. There are several cases when "about" is , e. Statements that could answer the question are in the accusative case. Petersburg, Florida" would be in the accusative case, if you said it in Russian. Statements that could answer the question are in the prepositional case. The vowel in is , the letter you add to end nouns in the prepositional case. Genitive case[edit] The genitive case is used to show possession, negation, and quantity such as numbers. Genitive nouns[edit] Masculine and neuter nouns form the genitive case the same way: The exceptions are masculine words ending in or add . Feminine nouns drop the and add . The exceptions are if the word ends in or , or for the 7-letter spelling rule, add . Genitive adjectives[edit] Masculine and neuter adjectives form the genitive case the same way: This is pronounced "ovo"! The exceptions are masculine words ending in or , or for the 5-letter spelling rule with the ending unstressed, change to pronounced "yevo". Feminine adjectives change the ending to rhymes with "boy". The exceptions are feminine words ending in or , or for the 5-letter spelling rule with the ending unstressed, change to pronounced "yay". Genitive case of possessive pronouns[edit] Nominative.

This is the first real crack in the official story, and the commentary I wrote on this when it was produced was rated as top news story of the year by Google. The VT version has since disappeared, as has Jesse Ventura. This is how the video evidence used by VT now looks on Google: They show free films on deck. The LST flooded memories as I crawled, with some difficulty nowadays, through hatches and down into the engine room. The troop quarters were beyond primitive, the food non-existent, but it was only a few days, including riding out a typhoon. The ship "and calling an LST a ship is an abuse of the term" listed from side to side in the wind and waves, quite a trip. I remembered a scale in one of the, hell what are hallways on a ship? With gear I weighed, based on a body weight of about then. It would go down to after malaria. I sit at around now. Aside again, this reminds me that I was asked recently to promote www. There have been terrible divides between veterans of different wars, a need for an abused underclass to find identity in basking those who went before them. While on LST, I noted a plaque: It is really too late to bridge this divide, too few Vietnam vets survive today. One of my friends, Henry Sullivan, called yesterday. Ah, but I digress. Support real memorials and keep memories alive so that we may some day learn just one little thing, that all wars are a con. A mention of something that should matter: Note on this page that VT will have 47, Fakebook fans. Since then it has been war. A few years ago, a major offshore publication in Iran began accepting submissions for publication. Two of the articles I wrote there got over 2 million reads with one up to 6 million. Two years later, the GM was arrested for unspecified charges by counter-intelligence services. We had immediately identified him as an asset of the Mossad. This is why I mention Fakebook. There is a reason the Washington Post, Newsweek, the Hill, Politico and so many other publications came after VT last year, and that is because we turn, in the real world, massive numbers. Youtube kills our videos, Google delists us and we refuse to follow the Mossad asset tales like Pizzagate and Jade Helm. We keep busting their attempts to controls us the way they control almost all alternative or independent media.

We work hard to provide you with a most valuable and actual information. The English language is not native to us, and we misspell sometimes. If you catch sight of a mistake, then please will not throw tomatoes at us, and leave the comment with the description of the mistake. A comment may be left at the end of every page. A local Russian SIM-card is useful for every tourist. You will gain access to many services. Here we tell you how to purchase it, describe the most interesting contracts from the Russian mobile service providers, and give a few valuable advices. Why a local SIM will be useful for a tourist The first benefit is the mobile internet access. No doubt, you can use your own mobile contract, but then you use a roaming service. The price for the internet access with a Russian SIM is much cheaper in most cases. You will find a special chapter about the prices below on this page. The second benefit is an opportunity to use local Russian services. They are taxi online ordering, food delivery ordering, a car parking payment, etc. Most of the services ordered by phone or internet make you confirm yourself by SMS. You cannot use these services without a local SIM card. Also, you can make foreign phone calls from this SIM, and sometimes they are cheaper than roaming calls. In any way, it is easy and cheap to purchase a local SIM in Russia; you will not spend too much money and valuable time. Only one company prefers CDMA type. If your smartphone does not support GSM, then we advise to buy a cheap smartphone in Russia. In electronic stores in Russia you can find a fully functional Android device at a moderate charge; it can be Russian rubles 50 US dollars or even cheaper. Of course, this phone is not a high quality, but it is enough for working with the Internet see photo. You should forget about this provider, because it is almost impossible to buy their contract nowadays. The quality of sound and internet connection is the same, and the cost is also similar. If you ask Russians about the difference, then every person will tell you one of the operators is better than other two. You should know these opinions are subjective. The quality of service depends on a region. For example, MTS can work better on one street in Moscow, and Megafon can work better on another street. You cannot presage it. So, we advise to choose based on prices, discounts, and terms of agreement. The signal quality is also depends on your location; how far you stand from the antenna. It is hard for the providers find a place for equipment, and they install it on any square they can rent. To show you a good example, we made a few photos of equipment installed on the roof of a restaurant in the Moscow centre. If you see such situation, do not be surprised. Where to buy a local SIM in Russian cities We Russians sometimes wonder why we have so many cell communication sale offices in our cities. You can find at least three of them near every subway station in Moscow and tens at airports. These offices sell not only mobile phones and SIM-cards. You will also find notebooks, tablet PCs, web-cameras, chargers, flash storage cards, different cords and even air tickets inside. They try to survive using all opportunities they can invent, because the competition is very strong. There are hundreds of networks of mobile communication stores in Moscow. Look for the photo at the right. You can also purchase aircraft and railroad tickets, book a hotel, order a taxi or purchase an insurance inside. This group of companies holds their own bank, and you can issue documents for Visa or MasterCard. These offices are commonly used not only for sales, but also for a customer support. Some tourists search for these company stores first of all, because they think to have a cheaper service there. In fact, prices are the same, and no matter where you buy a contract. MTS logo is an egg on a red background. You should remember, you can buy MTS contracts only inside. See our small gallery of photos below. The Megafon offices have the second place in the prevalent list. Their colour is green, and the logo is; let us think; it is hard to say exactly what is it. See the gallery of photos below and remember that only Megafon contracts are available inside. The BeeLine stores are rare. The company is losing its market positions every year, and some marketing specialists forecast they will lose the competition and will close during the next few years. The colours are yellow and black same as the body of a bee. See the photos below and do not forget you can purchase only the BeeLine contract there. In fact, not every salesman knows these rules. A bad situation can happen when you visit a cell sales office, when you ask a salesman for a SIM-card, but he will reject you. In this case, you better turn around and visit any other mobile communication store. A competence of the staff is rather low, and you should not believe them if they tell you cannot buy a SIM as foreigner in Russia. Sometimes they tell like that because they do not know how to issue the documents. The most interesting contracts and prices Unfortunately, there are no any special contracts or tariffs for tourists. From the other side, some common contracts are attractive for tourists. Almost all tariffs are prepaid, so you no need to worry about possible debts. We advise them first of others because of the name with Latin letters makes them easy to buy for tourist. The price is rubles. This company is always distinguishing itself from others by cheapest prices. BeeLine introduces an enormous quantity of tariffs, and customers are usually at a loss. The company has hired a famous comic Sergey Svetlakov for its advertisement, but the effectiveness is poor. These tariffs are hard to buy for tourists, and we recommend them as the last thing. As you see, there is no large difference in price, so, we recommend purchasing MTS Smart contract. It is easy to find because its name in English. After you got a SIM-card You can insert it into your smart phone and start using the mobile internet access. No any activation is needed. The last our advice is to check the SIM card type you need; it can be casual, micro, and nano. Ask the salesman to insert the SIM into your device to sure everything is ok and work properly. To do this, you must go to the website: In this screenshot, you can see a simple example: Once you submit the form and create your account, you will receive an email that will prompt you to confirm your registration in order to complete this process. Once your account is verified, you can log in to the RZD website with your username and password through the link: Select your itinerary Once you have an account and have accessed the website, the first step is to head to the English language search form, which is located here: Between the departure and arrival fields, there is a button with two arrows that can change the direction of your trip with a single click. You will have to provide information on the number of passengers traveling with you and your own personal data later on in this process. In the following example, I have chosen a round trip from Moscow to St. Petersburg to Moscow and number A for the return journey from Moscow to St. Petersburg. Select your seat On the next screen you can see the different types of train compartments. Compartment 2nd class Kupe. This is a standard compartment for four people, including two lower and two upper berths, or beds. The compartments located at the beginning and end of each train car next to the Water Closet are for two people. This is the most economical option see photo below. This compartment has a higher level of comfort for two people and has two bunk beds. This type of compartment is more expensive. In the screenshot below I chose four seats in a standard compartment for four people 17 to 20. They are marked in dark blue the orange shape is the table in the compartment. The squares marked in gray are already reserved. The white squares are the available seats. Passenger information The next step is to enter the personal details of all passengers name, passport number, place and date of birth, etc. Full The normal rate for an adult Child. The rate for a child years old Baby without seat. You also have the option of purchasing cancellation insurance, but it is in Russian. Confirm your information Your origin and destination, date and time of your trip, and your personal data have all been entered and now it is almost time to pay; the next screen will summarize how your booking data will appear. Pay for your reservation The last step of the booking process is to pay for your reservation via credit card, which is the only payment method that is accepted. You must enter your credit card information and click the OK button The system automatically generates electronic tickets and will forward them to your e-mail, ready to print. Your tickets are also available and accessible via your account on the RZD website. An example of a Russian train ticket, with the personal data deleted, is below: Many of them apply abusive commissions so you have to pay attention to the prices they charge. I always recommend buying tickets online on the RZD website, however, there are those that cannot complete the reservation process on RZD because their card does not work. In this case, I recommend Tutu Travel for buying tickets. Through this web site also in English , you are also buying tickets directly on RZD, but there is a small commission â€” rubles per ticket. If you want to pay via Paypal, then you can make your reservation through the website Russiantrain , although the commission will be a little higher, however: They can advise you in English on the purchase of tickets more complicated as the different routes of the Trans-Siberian You can purchase tickets with more than 45 days in advance in RZD you can buy the tickets between 30 and 45 days in advance You can purchase tickets for international trains RZD not always allows purchasing international tickets coming out of the Russian border as the Trans-Siberian railway I hope this tutorial has helped you book your train tickets to travel in Russia online. The Russian Sleep Experiment: Behind the Scenes Do you like this video? Russian researchers in the late s kept five people awake for fifteen days using an experimental gas based stimulant. This was before closed circuit cameras so they had only microphones and five inch thick glass porthole sized windows into the chamber to monitor them. The chamber was stocked with books, cots to sleep on but no bedding, running water and toilet, and enough dried food to last all five for over a month. The test subjects were political prisoners deemed enemies of the state during World War II. Everything was fine for the first five days; the subjects hardly complained having been promised falsely that they would be freed if they submitted to the test and did not sleep for 30 days. Their conversations and activities were monitored and it was noted that they continued to talk about increasingly traumatic incidents in their past, and the general tone of their conversations took on a darker aspect after the four day mark. After five days they started to complain about the circumstances and events that lead them to where they were and started to demonstrate severe paranoia. They stopped talking to each other and began alternately whispering to the microphones and one way mirrored portholes. Oddly they all seemed to think they could win the trust of the experimenters by turning over their comrades, the other subjects in captivity with them. At first the researchers suspected this was an effect of the gas itself After nine days the first of them started screaming. He ran the length of the chamber repeatedly yelling at the top of his lungs for three hours straight, he continued attempting to scream but was only able to produce occasional squeaks. The researchers postulated that he had physically torn his vocal cords. The most surprising thing about this behavior is how the other captives reacted to it They continued whispering to the microphones until the second of the captives started to scream. The two non-screaming captives took the books apart, smeared page after page with their own feces and pasted them calmly over the glass portholes. The screaming promptly stopped. So did the whispering to the microphones. After three more days passed. The researchers checked the microphones hourly to make sure they were working, since they thought it impossible that no sound could be coming with five people inside. The oxygen consumption in the chamber indicated that all five must still be alive. In fact it was the amount of oxygen five people would consume at a very heavy level of strenuous exercise. On the morning of the 14th day the researchers did something they said they would not do to get a reaction from the captives, they used the intercom inside the chamber, hoping to provoke any response from the captives they were afraid were either dead or vegetables. Compliance will earn one of you your immediate freedom. Unable to provoke any more response using the intercom it was finally decided to open the chamber at midnight on the fifteenth day. The chamber was flushed of the stimulant gas and filled with fresh air and immediately voices from the microphones began to object. The chamber was opened and soldiers sent in to retrieve the test subjects. They began to scream louder than ever, and so did the soldiers when they saw what was inside. Precisely how much of the water on the floor was actually blood was never determined. The destruction of flesh and exposed bone on their finger tips indicated that the wounds were inflicted by hand, not with teeth as the researchers initially thought. Closer examination of the position and angles of the wounds indicated that most if not all of them were self-inflicted. The abdominal organs below the ribcage of all four test subjects had been removed. While the heart, lungs and diaphragm remained in place, the skin and most of the muscles attached to the ribs had been ripped off, exposing the lungs through the ribcage. All the blood vessels and organs remained intact, they had just been taken out and laid on the floor, fanning out around the eviscerated but still living bodies of the subjects. The digestive tract of all four could be seen to be working, digesting food. It quickly became apparent that what they were digesting was their own flesh that they had ripped off and eaten over the course of days. Most of the soldiers were Russian special operatives at the facility, but still many refused to return to the chamber to remove the test subjects. They continued to scream to be left in the chamber and alternately begged and demanded that the gas be turned back on, lest they fall asleep Another 5 of the soldiers lost their lives if you count ones that committed suicide in the weeks following the incident. In the struggle one of the four living subjects had his spleen ruptured and he bled out almost immediately. The medical researchers attempted to sedate him but this proved impossible. He was injected with more than ten times the human dose of a morphine derivative and still fought like a cornered animal, breaking the ribs and arm of one doctor. When heart was seen to beat for a full two minutes after he had bled out to the point there was more air in his vascular system than blood. Even after it stopped he continued to scream and flail for another three minutes, struggling to attack anyone in reach and just repeating the word "MORE" over and over, weaker and weaker, until he finally fell silent. The surviving three test subjects were heavily restrained and moved to a medical facility, the two with intact vocal cords continuously begging for the gas demanding to be kept awake. The most injured of the three was taken to the only surgical operating room that the facility had. In the process of preparing the subject to have his organs placed back within his body it was found that he was effectively immune to the sedative they had given him to prepare him for the surgery. He fought furiously against his restraints when the anesthetic gas was brought out to put him under. He managed to tear most of the way through a four inch wide leather strap on one wrist, even through the weight of a pound soldier holding that wrist as well. It took only a little more anesthetic than normal to put him under, and the instant his eyelids fluttered and closed, his heart stopped. In the autopsy of the test subject that died on the operating table it was found that his blood had triple the normal level of oxygen. His muscles that were still attached to his skeleton were badly torn and he had broken 9 bones in his struggle to not be subdued. Most of them were from the force his own muscles had exerted on them. The second survivor had been the first of the group of five to start screaming. His vocal cords destroyed he was unable to beg or object to surgery, and he only reacted by shaking his head violently in disapproval when the anesthetic gas was brought near him. He shook his head yes when someone suggested, reluctantly, they try the surgery without anesthetic, and did not react for the entire six hour procedure of replacing his abdominal organs and attempting to cover them with what remained of his skin. The surgeon presiding stated repeatedly that it should be medically possible for the patient to still be alive. One terrified nurse assisting the surgery stated that she had seen the patients mouth curl into a smile several times, whenever his eyes met hers. When the surgery ended the subject looked at the surgeon and began to wheeze loudly, attempting to talk while struggling. Assuming this must be something of drastic importance the surgeon had a pen and pad fetched so the patient could write his message. Although they had to be injected with a paralytic for the duration of the operation. The surgeon found it impossible to perform the operation while the patients laughed continuously. Once paralyzed the subjects could only follow the attending researchers with their eyes. The paralytic cleared their system in an abnormally short period of time and they were soon trying to escape their bonds. The moment they could speak they were again asking for the stimulant gas. The researchers tried asking why they had injured themselves, why they had ripped out their own guts and why they wanted to be given the gas again. Only one response was given: The commanding officer, an ex-KGB instead saw potential, and wanted to see what would happen if they were put back on the gas. The researchers strongly objected, but were overruled. In preparation for being sealed in the chamber again the subjects were connected to an EEG monitor and had their restraints padded for long term confinement. It was obvious that at this point all three were putting up a great struggle to stay awake. One of subjects that could speak was humming loudly and continuously; the mute subject was straining his legs against the leather bonds with all his might, first left, then right, then left again for something to focus on. The remaining subject was holding his head off his pillow and blinking rapidly. Having been the first to be wired for EEG most of the researchers were monitoring his brain waves in surprise. They were normal most of the time but sometimes flat lined inexplicably. It looked as if he were repeatedly suffering brain death, before returning to normal. As they focused on paper scrolling out of the brainwave monitor only one nurse saw his eyes slip shut at the same moment his head hit the pillow. His brainwaves immediately changed to that of deep sleep, then flatlined for the last time as his heart simultaneously stopped. The only remaining subject that could speak started screaming to be sealed in now. His brainwaves showed the same flatlines as one who had just died from falling asleep. The commander gave the order to seal the chamber with both subjects inside, as well as three researchers. One of the named three immediately drew his gun and shot the commander point blank between the eyes, then turned the gun on the mute subject and blew his brains out as well. He pointed his gun at the remaining subject, still restrained to a bed as the remaining members of the medical and research team fled the room. We are the madness that lurks within you all, begging to be free at every moment in your deepest animal mind. We are what you hide from in your beds every night. We are what you sedate into silence and paralysis when you go to the nocturnal haven where we cannot tread. The EEG flatlined as the subject weakly choked out, "So

Petersburg, July 13 26 , After discussing the ten demands addressed to Serbia, I drew his attention to the fact that, quite apart from the clumsy form in which they were presented some of them were quite impracticable, even if the Servian Government agreed to accept them. Thus, for example, points 1 and 2 could not be carried out without recasting the Servian press law and associations law, and to that it might be difficult to obtain the consent of the Skupchtina. As for enforcing points 4 and 5, this might lead to most dangerous consequences, and even to the risk of acts of terrorism directed against the Royal Family and against Pashitch, which clearly could not be the intention of- Austria. With regard to the other points it seemed to me that, with certain changes of detail, it would not be difficult to find a basis of mutual agreement, if the accusations contained in them were confirmed by sufficient proof. In the interest of the maintenance of peace, which, according to the statements of Szapary, is as much desired by Austria as by all the Powers, it was necessary to end the tension of the present moment as soon as possible. With this object in view it seemed to me most desirable that the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador should be authorised to enter into a private exchange of views in order to redraft certain articles of the Austrian note of the 10th 23rd July in consultation with me. This method of procedure would perhaps enable us to find a formula which would prove acceptable to Serbia, while giving satisfaction to Austria in respect of the chief of her demands. Please convey the substance of this telegram to the Minister for Foreign Affairs in a judicious and friendly manner. Paris, July 13 26 , THE Director of the Political Department informs me that upon his informing the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador of the contents of the Servian reply to the ultimatum, the Ambassador did not conceal his surprise that it had failed to satisfy Giesl. Paris, July 13 21 , Her sole object is to secure her own peace and quiet, and consequently it rests with Russia to prevent war. Germany is at one with France in her ardent desire to preserve peace, and she sincerely hopes that France will exercise a moderating influence at St. The Ambassador replied that such a course was not possible, owing to the decision not to intervene in the Austro-Servian dispute. Petersburg and Vienna, for that the matter amounted, in effect, to a dispute between Austria and Russia. The Ambassador alleged that he had no instructions. Finally, the Minister refused to agree to the German proposal. Telegram THE Director of the Political Department has expressed the personal opinion that the series of representations made by Germany at Paris aim at intimidating France and at securing her intervention at St. Berlin July 13 26 , Telegram, ON the news reaching Berlin that the Austrian army had mobilised against Serbia, a large crowd, in which the papers report the presence of an Austrian element, gave vent to a series of noisy demonstrations in favour of Austria Late in the evening the crowd several times collected before the Imperial Russian Embassy and some anti-Russian shouting occurred. Hardly any police were present and no precautions were taken. London, July 14 27 , Having heard from the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg that you would be prepared to accept such a combination, Grey decided to turn it into an official proposal, which he communicated yesterday to Berlin, Paris, and Rome. Petersburg, July 14 27 , It exceeds all our expectations in its moderation, and in its desire to afford the fullest satisfaction to Austria. We do not see what further I demands could be made by Austria, unless the Vienna Cabinet is seeking for a pretext for war with Serbia. Paris, July 14 27 , The German Ambassador discussed the situation again to-day at great length with the Director of the Political Department. The Ambassador laid great stress on the utter impossibility of any mediation or conference. They both confirmed the information respecting the action taken by the German Ambassador, which Sevastopoulo has already telegraphed to you. This morning Baron von Schoen confirmed his declaration of yesterday in writing, i. That Austria has declared to Russia that she seeks no territorial acquisitions and that she harbours no designs against the integrity of Serbia. Her sole object is to secure her own peace and quiet. That consequently it rests with Russia to avoid war. That Germany and France, entirely at one in their ardent desire to preserve peace, should exercise their moderating influence upon Russia. Baron von Schoen laid special emphasis on the expression of solidarity of Germany and France. The Minister of Justice is convinced that these steps on the part of Germany are taken with the evident object of alienating Russia and France, of inducing the French Government to make representations at St. Petersburg, and of thus compromising our ally in our eyes; and finally, in the event of war, of throwing -the responsibility not on Germany, who is ostensibly making every effort to maintain peace, but on Russia and France. IT is clear from your telegrams of the 13th 26 July that you were not then aware of the reply of the Servian Government. The telegram from Belgrade informing me of it also took twenty hours to reach us. There is no doubt I that this telegram was intentionally delayed by the Austrian telegraph office. The Minister having asked what form such action would take, the Ambassador replied that he had no exact information on the subject, but it might mean either the crossing of the Servian frontier, or an ultimatum, or even a declaration of war. Berlin, July 14 97 , I BEGGED the Minister for Foreign Affairs to support your proposal in Vienna that Szapary should be authorised to draw up, by means of a private exchange of views with you, a wording of the Austro-Hungarian demands which would be acceptable to both parties. He will telegraph in this sense to the German Ambassador at Vienna. I begged him to press Vienna with greater insistence to adopt this conciliatory line; Jagow answered that he could not advise Austria to give way. BEFORE my visit to the Minister for Foreign Affairs to-day his Excellency had received the French Ambassador, who endeavoured to induce him to accept the British proposal for action in favour of peace, such action to be taken simultaneously at St. Cambon suggested that these Powers should give their advice to Vienna in the following terms: By adopting this vague formula, all mention of the necessity of refraining from invading Servia might be avoided. Jagow refused pointblank to accept this suggestion in spite of the entreaties of the Ambassador, who emphasised, as a good feature of the suggestion, the mixed grouping of the Powers, thanks to which the opposition between the Alliance and the Entente a matter of which Jagow himself had often complained was avoided. WHEN your Royal Highness applied to me at a time of especial stress, you were not mistaken in the sentiments which I entertain for you, or in my cordial sympathy with the Servian people. The existing situation is engaging my most serious attention, and my Government are using their utmost endeavour to smooth away the present difficulties. I have no doubt that your Highness and the Royal Servian Government wish to render that task easy by neglecting no step which might lead to a settlement, and thus both prevent the horrors of a new war and satisfy the dignity of Servia. So long as the slightest hope exists of avoiding bloodshed, all our efforts must be directed to that end; but if in spite of our earnest wish we are not successful, your Highness may rest assured that Russia will in no case disinterest herself in the fate of Servia. Vienna, July 14 27 , During a long conversation which I had with Macchio to-day I drew his attention, in a perfectly friendly way, to the unfavourable impression produced in Russia by the presentation of demands by Austria to Servia, which it was quite impossible for any independent State, however small, to accept. I added that this method of procedure might lead to the most undesirable complications, and that it had aroused profound surprise and general condemnation in Russia. We can only suppose that Austria, influenced by the assurances given by the German Representative at Vienna, who has egged her on throughout this crisis, has counted on the probable localisation of the dispute with Servia, and on the possibility of inflicting with impunity a serious blow upon that country. The declaration by the Russian Government that Russia could not possibly remain indifferent in the face of such conduct has caused a great sensation here. Petersburg, that such action ought rather to be taken at Vienna, and that the Berlin Cabinet were the best qualified to do so. Grey also pointed out that the Servian reply to the Austrian note had exceeded anything that could have been expected in moderation and in its spirit of conciliation. Grey added that he had therefore come to the conclusion that Russia must have advised Belgrade to return a moderate reply, and that he thought the Servian reply could form the basis of a peaceful and acceptable solution of the question. In these circumstances, continued Grey, if Austria were to begin hostilities in spite of that reply, she would prove her intention of crushing Servia. Looked at in this light, the question might give rise to a situation which might lead to a war in which all the Powers would be involved. Grey finally declared that the British Government were sincerely anxious to act with the German Government as long as the preservation of peace was in question; but, in the contrary event, Great Britain reserved to herself full liberty of action. Fiume, July 15 28 , Berlin, July 15 28 , THE Wolff Bureau has not published the text of the Servian reply, although it was communicated to them. Up to the present this note has not appeared in extenso in any of the local papers, which, to all appearances, do not wish to publish it in their columns, being well aware of the calming effect which it would have on German readers. Vienna, July 15 28 , Telegram. THE order for general mobilisation has been signed. Petersburg, July 15 28 , In face of the hostilities between Austria-Hungary and Servia, it is necessary that Great Britain should take instant mediatory action, and that the military measures undertaken by Austria against Servia should be immediately suspended. Otherwise mediation will only serve as an excuse to make the question drag on, and will meanwhile make it possible for Austria to crush Servia completely and to acquire a dominant position in the Balkans. Sent to Paris, Berlin Vienna, and Rome. Berlin, July 16 29 , On my enquiry whether he had received from Vienna a reply respecting your proposal for private discussions at St. Petersburg the Secretary of State answered in the negative. He declares that it is very difficult for him to produce any effect at Vienna, especially openly. He even added, in speaking to Cambon, that were pressure brought to bear too obviously Austria would hasten to face Germany with a fait accompli. I replied that presumably you had been in favour of a compromise from the outset, provided always that it were acceptable, not only to Austria, but equally to Russia. He then said that it appeared that Russia had begun to mobilise on the Austrian frontier, and that he feared that this would make it more difficult for Austria to come to an understanding with us, all the more so as Austria was mobilising against Servia alone, and was making no preparations upon our frontier. I replied that, according to the information in my possession, Austria was mobilising upon the Russian frontier also, and that consequently we had to take similar steps. I added that whatever measures we might, perhaps have taken on our side were in no wise directed against Germany. Nish, July 16 29 , Paris, July 16 29 , FOR the information of the President of the French Republic on his return, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs had prepared a short summary of the present political situation, approximately in the following terms: Austria, fearing internal disintegration, seized upon the assassination of the Archduke as an excuse for an attempt to obtain guarantees, which may assume the form of an occupation of Servian military lines or even Servian territory. Germany is supporting Austria. The preservation of peace depends upon Russia alone, for the question at issue must be " localised " between Austria and Servia; that question is the punishment of Servia for her previous policy and the obtaining of guarantees for the future. Germany concludes from this that a moderating influence should be exerted at St. This sophism has been refuted both in Paris and in London. In Paris, Baron von Schoen vainly endeavoured to induce France to adopt joint action with Germany towards Russia for the preservation of peace. The same attempts were made in London. France and England are unable to bring any moderating pressure to bear upon Russia, as, so far, that Power has shown the greatest moderation, more particularly in her advice to Servia to accept as much as was possible of the Austrian note. Apparently Germany has now given up the idea of pressure upon Russia only and inclines towards mediatory action both at St. Petersburg and at Vienna, but at the same time both Germany and Austria are endeavouring to cause the question to drag on.
