

Chapter 1 : Penicillin VK - The People's Pharmacy

A Little Life by Hanya Yanagihara is an immensely powerful and heartbreaking novel of brotherly love and the limits of human endurance. When four graduates from a small Massachusetts college move to New York to make their way, they're broke, adrift, and buoyed only by their friendship and ambition.

Prague is Beautiful It seems there is never a shortage of beautiful sites and interesting meanings wherever we find ourselves on this planet. After a pretty perfect week in Italy, we traveled to Prague, Czech Republic. We were picked up at the airport by the hotel car and the driver gave us a wonderful little mini tour on our way into the city. Next morning was Sunday and we found church in a big embassyesque house not far from the Prague Castle. Our individual phone maps and taxi driver were divergent in their agreement of where the church was located and we ended up walking as fast as my sandals would allow us to get there before the meeting was too far along. Not only is my brain fairly well oriented to directions, but it seems like we should have listened to my particular phone as well. We were given headphones for an English interpretation of the Sacrament Meeting, and that was quite an interesting experience. The Hubby and I walked back to the hotel the long way. It took us about 5 hours to make the 45 minute walk as we investigated the entire castle including Cathedral, Basilica, Palace for the royalty, village for the common workers, shops, and guard house changing. We also passed by famous bridges, vineyards, and beautiful views of the city. A little casual and formal all in one shot. Vitas Cathedral is inside of the Castle walls, and took years to complete in its various stages. Fabulous windows, sculptures in wood, metal and stone, beautiful organ and artwork everywhere. For some reason on this day we were noticing and paying special attention to all the amazing doors that we came across. The hinges, inlays, and woodwork were really fun to compare. When seeing a fire furnace like this big green ceramic one located in nearly every castle room, I always try to picture how it would be to never see your fire being stoked or created. The servants would do the dirty work behind the wall so as to never enter the room with the nobles. It would feel uncomfortable to never even be able to thank them, or do it yourself without having to call for help. Just so foreign to today's living. This room had coat of arms and family trees uniting them all over the ceilings. Check out this hardware. Such beautiful cool books. Within the castle walls is also "Golden Lane" which housed many artisans and goldsmiths starting from the 15th Century clear up until the middle of the 20th Century. Now there is an extensive armory on display in the top floors with torture chamber relics, and many different weapons. The tiny little houses were occupied with alchemist, seamstress, goldsmith, and other examples of life as it once was on the lane. Inside of the Cathedral. After walking down the hill and past St Wenceslas Vinyard we found some interesting potato chips. The curly cut potato spread apart onto a skewer stick and deep-fried was quite yummy and novel. ALL the sidewalks in the entire city are made with little two inch square marble or stone pavers. These are long strips of rolled out bread dough placed on round metal rollers that are spinning above a hot fire. Before cooking the girls roll the dough in a sugary mixture. Then after cooking they cool, take the sweet bread off from the rolling pin sized roller, and place them in bags for consumption. Walking onto the Charles Bridge. So many tourists from so many places, buying so many artsy souvenirs, and taking so many pictures. The music from street musicians was almost always audible, and concert fliers for the churches and concert halls were being hawked all over town. From the middle of the bridge toward the castle. Other side of the bridge. There are several other bridges that we crossed. This one was the only no vehicle bridge. Mostly Baroque architecture amongst the old Gothic and Roman buildings. Electric rail cars go right along with traffic on many streets. This is the astronomical clock and is the oldest working clock like this in the world. Erected in , it has many mechanical expressions. It tells the time in several ways, i. It shows the phases of the moon, and the sun, and shows the time of sunrise and sunset. I found it quite fascinating. A crowd gathers around it on each hour to watch an unimpressive display of 12 apostles spinning in a circle, a cock crowing, and "death" striking bells for the passage of time. The main town square is just adjacent, and always had musicians, bubble artists, and street performers showing their talents. Which steeple represents Eve and which is Adam? Large statue in the center of the square is of Jan Hus, an early reformer, priest and leader of the people. He believed that the bible should be read in the language of the people and that they should not be forgiven of their sins by paying the priest off. The Hubby takes some cool pictures in this old city. Huge chandelier in this old church, set off by painted murals on all the walls. I joined this "free" tour in which you pay for what you feel you gained from it. JohnPaul was informative and entertaining, so he got a good tip from me after I followed him all over the east side of the city. This Prague ham being cooked out on Wenceslas Square. Narrow streets curving around with beautiful Baroque architecture. The main Jewish synagogue in the Jewish quarter. Very Moorish in its design, because the Moors were more kind to the Jews than the Christians. The Hubby had to work for several days while we were in Prague, so I took these city tours as well as a tour 40 km outside of the city to the summer home of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria. If you go to your history books you can find that this man along with his wife Sophie, was assassinated in Sarajevo in - years ago and is one of the major events that launched World War I. This castle, named Konopiste was pretty well preserved and housed a CRAZY collection of weapons, armory, and wild game antlers, plumage and other animal trophies from game Ferdinand had downed. In his dairies he kept track of an estimated , game kills, and this place appeared to display a good many of them. There were extensive grounds and gardens that we walked around and enjoyed as well. Beautiful country and city.
