He was planning to go to a ball game one evening and â€™ always a dapper dresser â€™ decided he needed a pair of shoes to match. More than anything, James wanted to stand out. So he got himself a can of gold spray paint. The shoes James painted were high-heeled. The big Afro he wore in high school is also a thing of the past â€™ a hat now usually covering his bald head. But James, 58, is still pretty much the coolest guy around. Also the most outgoing. He founded Water Time Water Co. He also sells 5-gallon kegs of spring water. It was a place where they sold bell-bottom pants and dress boots, both of which were the rage at the time. It was hugely popular. James eventually moved back to Burlington where he opened his own hair-care product business â€™ Discount Plus on Rauhut Street. Somewhere along the way, he was approached about helping with a nightclub on North Church Street. He recalled one night they listened hard to the music and decided a new sound system was needed. James and his wife, Elena, have a year-old son, Huston. James was the fifth of 10 children of Johnny and Corinna James. She could talk with anyone. He said that three or four times a week, he patrols the block picking up trash and making sure everything is in order. His neighbors wave and speak, and have become his close friends, James said â€™ all of them looking out for one another. To anyone who visits his house, James offers a bottle of water and a good conversation. If those visitors know a place he might merchandise his product, he asks them to let him know.
