Many Bible maps are produced by PhD professors who do not believe the Bible is real history and reject the creation story, the flood, the tower of Babel, the Exodus, the Conquest. Further they reject inspiration of the Bible and view David and Solomon as mythical people who never lived. The atheism of these Bible map creators lurks in every city the place on their maps. Our maps have a 5 km from the surface resolution and are almost perfect. Chronology is the science of historical dating. Great care has been taken into creating the most accurate Bible timelines available. Most commercially available Bible chronologies are widely inaccurate. Part of the reason is that the creators of the chronologies are atheists and do not view the stories in the Bible as ever actually happening. Consequently, these atheists will never get the correct dates for events they view as fiction. Knowing the precise GPS coordinates of a Bible city ensures it is marked exactly in the correct place on the map. The multitude of errors of city locations in commercial maps are compounded by the topographical distortions of the base maps. So not only is the base map distorted, a city is often placed tens of kilometres from its true location. With our correct base map, we can then locate a city exactly where really is on that map ensuring the highest level of precision. Its history is captivating and mysterious to this day mainly because of the nearly still surviving monumental statues, called Moai, created by the early Rapanui people. Over the centuries Easter Island and its durable inhabitants lived through colonialism, epidemics, food shortages, internal wars and slave raids. Archaeologists believe that the initial inhabitants arrived between 1250 and 1300, and they journeyed here in canoes or catamarans from the Marquesas Islands of Polynesia. Important remnants of that culture are the massive Moai statues, reportedly representing deified ancestors. Most early settlements were located along the coastline and Moai were erected there so they could watch over their descendants, with their backs toward the spirit world in the sea. He later reported the island was lined with massive stone statues. In that was still the case when two Spanish ships sailed in. He also reported the island lined with statues. When James Cook visited in 1770, he noted that several Moai were lying face down. Later those same raiders spread smallpox to the island; a disease that eventually caused a fatal epidemic in the Marquesas islands. In the following years, the managers of a sheep ranch and missionaries started buying the newly available lands of the deceased, and this led to great confrontations between natives and settlers. In the 1830s, because of unsolvable disputes, missionaries evacuated most of the Rapanui population to the Gambier islands. By the end of the decade a mere 150 people lived on the island, and much of its cultural knowledge had been lost. Easter Island was annexed by Chile on September 9, 1888, and the validity of that land grab is still contested by some of the Rapanui to this day. At that time the surviving Rapanui were confined to the settlement of Hanga Roa. The rest of the island was rented to the Williamson-Balfour Company as a sheep farm. In 1878 British citizen Katherine Routledge visited for a yearlong expedition. It was the first in-depth study of local artifacts and inhabitants. After several months on the island the expedition published two large volumes of scientific reports. In 1915 an airport was constructed and the island was then managed by the Chilean Navy. In 1966, Chile declared Easter Island a province and the Rapanui given Chilean citizenship. Today tourism is the major industry, and although isolated and a bit difficult to reach, thousands visit here to experience for themselves the culture and mystery that is Easter Island. Curious About The World?
