Allen Cooper A visit to Yellowstone National Park is not complete without at least one overnight stay. A great injustice was served upon the many features of the park by calling it a park in the first place. A park is viewed by many as a place that can be seen in a casual afternoon stroll. Yellowstone is big, 3, square miles big, so plan on spending a couple of nights in order to take in just some of what the park has to offer. Yellowstone is no place to escape the crowds, it is a favorite due to the thermal features, waterfalls, historic landmarks and photographic opportunities that animals accustomed to people provide. You can get some great photographs in the park that are unattainable outside of the park simply because the protection of the animals is taken seriously and they are accustomed to having us around. There are 12 campgrounds in Yellowstone offering over 2, campsites. It may sound like a lot, but with over 4 million visitors a year, they more than fill up fast, in many cases they require a reservation which should add to the fun factor of planning your getaway. For an overview of the campgrounds in Yellowstone and reservations visit Yellowstone National Park Lodges. I call Yellowstone my backyard and here are my favorite campgrounds in Yellowstone. But, where you stay all depends on what you want to see and how much time you have. I like this campground because of its proximity to the lake and marina. The marina is just across the parking lot and is a nice place for an evening stroll or picnic. This is a great bivouac for boating or sight-seeing along the eastern corridor of the park. The Pebble Creek Campground offers 27 sites on a first-come, first-served basis. Each site has a picnic table and fire pit with grate. View wildlife and the dramatic landscape of the Lamar Valley, Hike along Soda Butte Creek or take advantage of the great fishing the area has to offer. The Knotty Fly Yellowstone Guide Service offers guided catch and release fly fishing in this area of the park. Learn to fly fish and catch native Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout. Slough Creek Campground is also located in Lamar Valley. Located at the end of a two mile graded dirt road, this campground is best suited for tents and small RVs. Some sites are located in the trees, some in an open meadow, and some along the banks of Slough Creek. Sites often fill by 8 am from opening day June through September. Slough Creek is a very popular stream for fishing. The famous, scenic Beartooth Pass is a short drive away. There are plenty of hiking opportunities nearby, including the Slough Creek Trail. Nighttime offers a quiet, unimpeded view of the stars and the possibility of hearing wolves howl. The first wolves in the Yellowstone wolf reintroduction were released just across the valley from here. Lewis Lake Campground is first come first serve located about eight miles from the South Entrance and a short walk from the southeast shore of Lewis Lake. If you are going to spend the night in park lodging, Lake Hotel is beautiful and its history was not lost in the recent remodel. Take time to sip a glass of wine in the lobby overlooking Yellowstone Lake. Also, any of the five new buildings at Canyon Lodge are very nice places to get a hot shower and soft bed. Great trails and views of Yellowstone Canyon await. After playing in the park for many years, these are my favorites. I hope you get to travel to Yellowstone and find a favorite campground of your own.

Being a former Yellowstone Savage myself, I couldn't put this book down!! I felt as if I could have written this book because so many of Joyce's experiences were shared by me and my friends! For anyone that has felt the love of the incredible land of Yellowstone, this is an awesome book!

Allen Cooper Yellowstone Park is amazing. The problem is that I am not the only one who thinks so. Over 4 million other people annually share my dream of visiting the park and some of them are camping. So, there are lots of great campsites waiting outside the park. I have selected a few options for each entrance whether you are traveling through the north, south, east or west entrances. Take Jardine road north of town for two miles to a left on forest road Eagle Creek has long been a secret camping spot for those who arrive to the Yellowstone area a bit too late to get any campsites within the park boundaries. If you get a spot, congratulations, you are camping like a local. Lots of Montanans camp here during fall elk season. Hard sided units allowed only, too many bears. Nearby is Colter Campground and Chief Joseph Campground both nestled in the dense pines right off the highway. With close proximity to the park and miles of wilderness, these campgrounds are a great place to launch your daily adventures from. Cooke City has good restaurants, great bars, motels and tourist amenities including The Knotty Fly, Yellowstone Fly Fishing Guide Service which can take you on a guided day hike to some great fishing spots, teach you to fly fish if needed and put you on some catch and release fly fishing for native Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout. Hard sided units can stay at Three Mile Campground appropriately named from its close proximity to the park boundary. Nearby Newton Creek Campground offers 41 sites and tent camping is available. For campers, there are several campgrounds just off of Highway Rainbow Point offers views and access to the Lake. Two miles further and only 8 miles from West Yellowstone is Lonesomehurst Campground. With only 27 sites and close proximity to some fabulous summer trout fishing, be sure to get there early or contact the forest service for a reservation. You can pull over and make a pot of tea and take in the scenery across the Lake where the Tetons tower over the lake shore. Have fun planning and executing your Yellowstone adventure.

Chapter 3 : Merry Yellowstone Christmas | Unsinkable Western History

Former Old Faithful Employees J(Click to read bios) In the fall of , a search was begun to find former employees who worked at Old Faithful Lodge during the summer of

The Yellowstone National Park historian knows horror stories far scarier than made-up specters. They are haunting, disturbing and particularly terrifying because they actually happened. These are the stories of people falling into boiling water, of wild animals attacking and feasting on flesh, and the unsolved mysteries as to whether a person fell or was pushed. Accidents and Foolhardiness in the first National Park. He told the stories as a historian, honestly and without shying away from the sometimes-gruesome details. Whittlesey was 4 years old the first time he visited Yellowstone from Oklahoma. The landscape entranced him and the fishing impressed his father. The family returned many times. When Whittlesey was 17, he met a ranger working on a garbage truck who invited him to an employee dance. It was so much fun Whittlesey knew he wanted to work in the park one day. The next summer Whittlesey had his own job on the back of a garbage truck in the park, starting a long, intermittent career that lead him to law school, graduate school for history and eventually the full-time job of park historian. A group of guides sat talking about the books someone should write about the park when someone mentioned all the ways people died in Yellowstone. Whittlesey saw the chapters unrolling in his head. He published the book in In , three young seasonal employees were walking back to their car in the dark after a day at the Firehole River. Hands joined, they jumped over a stream of steam, not realizing they were headed toward Cavern Spring. They landed on the precipice of the spring. The Earth crumbled below their weight as they tumbled into the deepest part of the degree pool. It was the first time in documented park history three people were critically burned at once. All three were rescued, although one died in the hospital. Four grizzly bear fatalities in and after 25 years without a bear-related death in the park made him realize it was time for another edition. Whittlesey wrote the books using records, but also interviews with surviving participants and witnesses, creating stories that sometimes haunted even him. Like the story of John Mark Williams who, during a snowstorm, fell into a degree hot spring burning himself from feet to neck. He returned to camp his skin already shedding from his body. Friends sat with him through the night unable to help him while he remained awake until he died in their arms. While these stories fulfill a morbid sense of curiosity, they also teach valuable safety lessons, Whittlesey said. But we have animals here that can eat you. People need to understand that. As a historian, Whittlesey sees his job as presenting the past in a factual manner. As a park employee, he hopes some of the stories prevent unnecessary deaths in the future.

Larry, Allie, and Pinkie arrived in Yellowstone National Park on June 16th, thinking that the concessionaire, Yellowstone Park Company, would be large enough to hire all three of them to work in one location. And, of course, it was. The friends were sent to Old Faithful Lodge.

And, of course, it was. The friends were sent to Old Faithful Lodge. Pinkie was an outdoor ice vendor in front of the Lodge. His most vivid memory is of panning sheets of bacon from 6: He would get a quick nap before returning for the lunch shift from Workers at the time were only given one day off each week. Despite the long and chaotic hours, and the cramped housing arrangement, the three comrades made lifelong memories and new friends over those months in Yellowstone. During the winter of , after serving missions in Switzerland and England, he emigrated to the United States. He began to take an interest in photography soon after his arrival in New York. In , he set up his first gallery in Council Bluffs, Iowa. In the spring of , he outfitted a wagon and team to take he and his family to Utah. There, he began a partnership with Marsena Cannon, an early Utah daguerreotypist and photographer. One year later, Cannon moved to the southern Utah, so Savage took on a new partner, artist George Ottinger. The studio of "Savage and Ottinger" grew in prominence over the years, with the work of both artists distributed across the country. The partnership continued until He was also the first to photograph Zion National Park before it was a park. He also captured hundreds of images documenting the growth of Utah towns. He traveled extensively over the western United States, taking pictures in such far-ranging areas as Canada and Mexico, and from California to Nebraska. His views were sold throughout the United States and Europe, and his studio at one time was the most widely known producer of western landscape views in the country. But his work is preserved in existing albumen prints which enjoy a good market among collectors. At least nineteen of the Yellowstone stereoviews of Savage are known. Savage visited Yellowstone in and Savage was reputable in Utah in his day, but his Yellowstone photos are little known. He did leave a newspaper article on his trip through the Park. All views seen by Savage of Yellowstone have this basic style. Orange Cabinet mounts with little or no credits on the obverse. The versos of these Savage views list them as part of the "Yellowstone National Park Series" followed by the view title.
