

Chapter 1 : All Dressed Up With Nowhere to Go - The Bright Beginnings

2. If someone is all dressed up with nowhere to go or all dressed up with no place to go, they are ready to do something but that thing is not happening. The end of the Cold War left Western troops all dressed up with nowhere to go.

In the broadest sense, it reflects the difficulty or inability of an individual to sustain the level of concentration necessary to function properly – in school, at work, or in other arenas of social interaction. Although the term most often bandied around with regards to this disorder is A. Children and adults with A. They are also far more likely to be high-energy, optimistic, charming and generally fun to be with. I classify them as O. We are all familiar with the O. But there is a parallel, rapidly growing off-the-derech phenomenon that is going unnoticed and unaddressed – the O. These are kids who are just going through the motions in our schools and public spaces, but are not spiritually connected to our Torah. I am getting a new wave of parents begging me to speak to their children. The profile is chillingly similar: High achieving in school. Well adjusted, with no emotional problems. They are eating on Yom Kippur, not keeping Shabbos, not keeping kosher; et al. No anger, no drugs, no promiscuous activity. They are just not buying what we are selling. In some of the cases, their educators have no idea of what is really going on, as many of the children are consistently scoring well on their Hebrew and General Studies tests. They discussed meeting from adults who had significant emunah questions that were suppressed and therefore not addressed in their formative years, those who felt spiritually and educationally unprepared for their inevitable encounter with the secular world, and those who were presented with a spurious negative view of non-Jewish people that, once disproved by their experience in the workplace, brought into question all lessons taught in their yeshiva years. Only time will tell. But as much as I hope it is the former, from my vantage point, it is feeling more like the latter. With that small slice, just do the math and try to figure out how many kids like that are in our school system. I can only tell you that in my twenty-five year of working with at-risk kids, this is a new and frightening experience for me. To proactively reverse this trend, we will need to become improve the way we transmit our precious mesorah to all our children. More in my next column. Related This Post Has 32 Comments Anonymous User 19 Aug Reply in previous generations we were busy to teach our children irat shamaim middos in our generation we take a lot from the goyim and we teach knowledge the difference is subtle and the result are big Anonymous User 19 Aug Reply A very important issue, thank you R Horowitz. We all know the high percentages of those who physically abuse others, were themselves abused at one point. By showing our children and ourselves the excitement and beauty it might give meaning to these precious OTD individuals. When we were growing up we were all dressed up with truly nowhere to go. At the same time we all knew the sham we were served up. Purim or Halloween, the kids are saying. They say it, and they are right in the symptoms, and they are maybe even right in that a person has a predisposition towards ADHD. Say for example a person had a very shocking birth. For example, a cord was around its neck. How did that tiny baby feel? Frightened for its life? And at some level, that panic and fear, never leaves them. They may come to expect danger any second. Other babies have other issues. These emotional problems actually could be resolved, if only they would be addressed. They stuff it away, put it on hold, repress the memory – but it cannot go away, it bothers them, until at some point they will choose to deal with it, comfort the inner child, acknowledge that the stress existed, but is over, or reframe in other ways that are acceptable. Of course, not all stresses happened at birth, although many did. Many are repeated incidents that began when one was too young to handle it properly. Other times it is a death of a loved one, or a violent car accident. Has anyone else noticed that a disproportionate number of kids who go off the derech have had car accidents? So if you blame them, it closes the door to intervention for many. Even a simple problematic behaviour is usually the result of sadness, say, and fear, and anger, and worry, and guilt, and resentment. Each of these began with a specific incident and was possibly reinforced by other specific incidents. EFT would work to address each of these aspects separately, gently remembering the issues as they arise, discussing them, with the understanding and love of an adult and mainly tapping for them, until the negative charge surrounding the incident went to zero. Then on to the next emotion that surfaces. I do point out here that some EFT practitioners are excellent, but others may not have expertise. Never continue with one you do not feel comfortable with. But the gains can be across the board, that is, for example, anger at parents, and overeating, and fear of heights, may have overlapping emotional contributors, so you can often have gains in all three areas at once. And I forgot to mention. Once someone has tapped on a specific traumatic incident, and brought the intensity down to zero in all its aspects, it never resurfaces. Rabbi Horowitz, would you be interested in my doing a real time demonstration online for this? Anonymous User 19 Aug Reply Parents and teachers have a great responsibility. They would encourage them to ask until their doubts are dissolved on the subject at hand. Practice what you preach. Perhaps this would help some from falling through the cracks. Anonymous User 19 Aug Reply Speak for yourself yitzchok. When I was growing up, I knew nothing about a sham. They are not invited. You project your cynicism and adult thoughts onto 13 year olds who think nothing like you. Hypocrisy is mostly decried on adult blogs. There may or may not be drugs, and there may or may not be promiscuous activity. Ask the kids to describe the Shabbos table, learning with their father, how much time they spend with their parents and what they discuss. Anonymous User 19 Aug Reply Anonymous Kids testing boundaries and going against parental values? Sounds like normal adolescence to me. If they are so bright and doing so well in school perhaps they are just plain old bored. Well it is in the non-thinking version which is a yeshiva education these days. Get the kids to think "throw a derech Hashem at them and analyze it" no preaching, actual thinking, you might actually turn these kids on. So you have to figure out who you are going to help in a particular class. Reference quoted by Dr Sorotzkin Ryan and Deci found in their research that parents who were more autonomy supportive promoted greater religious identification, as opposed to introjection, in their offspring. So we need to encourage thinking, being able to express an opinion or your values on a news item, incident or a story in your English literature session by delving into your inside and not looking for a Chazal. So we should be asking questions "what do you think, not what does Rashi say, Rashi has already thought about the text, what about you. He or she is probably just as much in need of a friendly face and someone to talk to, but as no one knows he is in this place no one offers. Kind of reminds me of a duck, what you see above the water is calm and collected, while under the water the thing is swimming for all its worth. Oh and its not just kids, I know a lot of adults who are staying on the derech by a hair. Hello M, It will be my great privilege and honor to respond to your astute observations, before I do though, please answer my yes or no question from the other day! please? They were indifferent" as if they declined to eat the main dish their mother prepared.

Chapter 2 : All Dressed Up Nowhere To Go "Lady Juliet

All Dressed Up and Nowhere to Go Meaning. Definition: To be completely prepared for an event or a project that fails to materialize. This expression appears in several variations, such as all dressed up and no place to go, all dressed up with nowhere to go, and all dressed up with no place to go.

Chapter 3 : all dressed up and nowhere to go | WordReference Forums

I returned just recently from California and my first ever Mega Conference as part of the AiG family. What an incredible time and blessing! Costa Mesa was beautiful and the weather predictable: sunny and gorgeous every day.

Chapter 4 : All Dressed Up with Nowhere to Go - Savvy Spice

All dressed up and nowhere to go, nearly 7, competitors in almost 1, yachts were left drifting around in the central Solent yesterday. Synonyms [edit] confounded, stymied.

Chapter 5 : What Does All Dressed Up and Nowhere to Go Mean? - Writing Explained

The night I met you We were tryin' to define What "hip" meant How could I forget you You were shakin' all that fine Equipment? Listen you, 's' been a week or two.

Chapter 6 : Meaning of all dressed up and nowhere to go

All Dressed Up with Nowhere to Go / May 11, If you grew up in a small town and loved to play dress up, you most likely ended up trying on dresses in your bedroom and promptly hanging them back in your closet.

Chapter 7 : All dressed up and nowhere to go - Dating and Relationships

All Dressed Up Nowhere To Go First post in a loong while.. one upside of having a blog that no one reads is that there is no pressure to update it regularly:p Well I've been pretty busy with trying to improve my money situation, so actually I couldn't afford to do much shopping lately.

Chapter 8 : Plain White T's - All Dressed Up Lyrics | MetroLyrics

To access the remainder of All Dressed Up With Nowhere to Go, Part 3 - The Impact of Pipeline Constraints and Apportionment on Permian Producers and Differentials you must be logged as a RBN Backstage Passâ,,ç subscriber.

Chapter 9 : "Diagnosis Murder" All Dressed Up and Nowhere to Die (TV Episode) - IMDb

To access the remainder of All Dressed Up With Nowhere to Go - Permian Differentials Widening on a Wave of New Crude Supplies you must be logged as a RBN Backstage Passâ,,ç subscriber.