Share Additional Resources for you to Explore In the 19th century, Modern Art broke away with traditional art schools and began a revolution in art. Make sure to read about the Impressionism movement which was already departing from conventional art in the 1800s and 1850s. To get a sense of the direction art was taking at that time, go see the work of pivotal artists like the Dutch Vincent Van Gogh and the French Paul Gauguin and Henri Matisse. They were instrumental in paving the road for Modern Art to emerge. Early in the 20th century, the Trocadero Ethnographic Museum in Paris played a major role influencing emerging modern artists with its works and artifacts from diverse cultures of Africa, Asia and the Americas, despite displaying their collections in not quite optimal conditions. Visit their websites and take a look. Modern art brought changes to major established museums, adding special sections to their exhibition space in order to showcase modern works. If interested in learning more about the history and evolution of museums, take a look at this TED Lesson by J. The Spaniard Pablo Picasso, considered one of the most important artists of the 20th Century, and always in the lookout to break new ground in modern art, was a pioneer of the Cubism movement, along the French artist George Braque. Picasso was very active working in painting, drawing, sculpture, printmaking, ceramics and even stage designs. He was an incredibly prolific artist. Make sure to visit these links. Many artists followed the route established by Picasso. Take a look at works by the Italian Amedeo Modigliani and the Rumanian Constantin Brancusi, both residents of Paris, who were also influenced by masks and figures from sub-Saharan Africa. Some German expressionist artists were also exposed to African sculptures at museums in Berlin and Munich, and began to use African aesthetics and spirituality to produce works that combined post-Impressionist colors and techniques with abstract elements in stylized compositions. Modern art generated an artistic chain reaction. Other artists followed different paths, like the Russian Wassily Kandinsky and the Swiss Paul Klee who were developing a new form of modern art called Abstract Art. They visited Tunisia in northern Africa and got inspired by Islamic culture to produce major works of art. The British sculptor Henry Moore looked at pre-Columbian cultures for inspiration, especially the unusual sculptures of the Maya-Toltec culture. Pre-Columbian art was also of extreme importance to Josef Albers, a pioneer of 20th Century modernism. Albers, a former Bauhaus professor in Germany, migrated to America in with his wife Ani, also an artist. In the USA he continued teaching, writing and creating art in many forms. The couple visited Mexico many times between and said: For these artists, inspiration from ancient cultures initiated an aesthetic revolution felt to this day.
