Early history[edit] In the early 16th century, a building in this area of London on the Great North Road was known as the Sheepcote. By , the inn was owned by William Riplingham, officer of the Great Wardrobe. Riplingham built an extension of the courtyard ranges on the site of the Angel Inn around , for which he was fined due to breaking building regulations. These ranges survived up to the early 19th century. By , the Angel was owned by James Compton, 3rd Earl of Northampton and occupied by Edward Fawcett, who ran the inn until his death in . The premises accommodated livestock traders destined for Smithfield Market as well as long distance travellers. Robert Bartholomew took over ownership of the inn in and was succeeded by his son, Christopher around , who continued to run it until the end of the century. Shelley said "The Angel dates back to before . In the seventeenth century and later, as old pictures testify, the inn presented the usual features of a large old country hostelry. The inn was on the northern side, on the corner of what is now the junction of Islington High Street and Pentonville Road , while the stables were now on what is St John Street, adjacent to the New Inn, which had been established in . The Angel benefited from the extra traffic brought by the New Road, and in addition to accommodation provided a number of assembly rooms for public meetings. The author and political activist Thomas Paine is believed to have begun writing Rights of Man at the Angel in , and there is a monument on Islington High Street commemorating this. The Angel was rebuilt during and to become a post house and meeting place for various London businesses. The redevelopment was directed by Charles Smith, and subsequently let to James Smith. In , the Angel was refurbished internally for William Henry and Richard Baker, later to become large-scale pub owners. The parish of Clerkenwell became the Metropolitan Borough of Finsbury in and when the City and South London Railway opened a new tube station in the area in it was named Angel. It was used temporarily by the City University. The proposals for demolition of the site along with road changes were opposed by Homes before Roads and the Islington Society. Plans to alter the intersection and create a layout similar to that at Old Street roundabout were abandoned and the building was saved from demolition. The ground floor is now a branch of The Co-operative Bank , and the ORC International market research agency occupies the upper floors. It is located on Upper Street to the north of the original Angel. In the game it is the third-cheapest property on the board, reflecting the downmarket state of Islington through most of the 20th century until its gentrification in the s. Unable to change the tyre, they sat and waited, hoping that help would soon arrive. Within seconds a car appeared and three young men jumped out offering to help. Their rescuers were "handsome, courteous and happy. They were also fair haired, blue eyed, and all wore white suits. The tyre was quickly changed, the young men ascertained the sisters had no further difficulties, and refusing to accept payment for their efforts drove away. However, as they continued down the country lane, their vehicle began to shimmer brightly, until the car was "almost transparent? When their mission is accomplished their otherwise unremarkable vehicle dematerializes in a magical shimmer. Dear Editor, Ever since I was a child I have had premonitions, but the following incident is the strangest thing that has ever happened to me. He said he was driving behind me when he saw it. He suggested that I go and get it checked. I then got into my car to reverse it into the parking space, and as I did so I turned to give the man a wave, but to my amazement he was nowhere to be seen, and a woman was driving into the space he had occupied. She looked at me strangely, so I told her what had happened. After doing my shopping, I went to the tyre place, and told them what had happened, asking if they could check the tyre. Much to their surprise, when they removed the tyre and checked it on their machine, there was a bubble, just as the stranger had described it. My guardian angel was certainly looking after me. Did he exist, or was it one of those strange phenomena? Or was it a guardian angel looking after me? Throughout history people have claimed to have seen angels, at the place where heaven and earth meet. Many religions and cultures include angels in their beliefs and folklore. There are countless stories of lives being saved by the timely appearance of a guardian angel. I recently read a very inspiring book about sightings of angels, and how they have saved the lives of many credible people. It contains reflections on angels past and present, and true stories of how they have touched our lives. Kevin Arnett, New Zealand From: Dear Editors, At my work I have heard about a colleague who had the following two extraordinary experiences: It was in Lausanne, Switzerland, where my colleague went one day for a walk. She stopped at a pedestrian crossing because she saw a truck coming. The next moment she saw, in the middle of the road, a lady with her child in a pram. The lady with the child did not see the truck at all. My colleague wanted to shout to them: My colleague turned her eyes towards the truck, and at that moment she saw a man standing in front of the truck, looking towards it with both arms raised. This happened in a fraction of a second and the man, dressed in white, seemed to have wings. My colleague thought he was an angel. The truck came to a standstill and the lady with her child crossed the road safely. It was also in Lausanne that the same colleague went out by car. She was driving alone in her car when all of a sudden it stopped on a bend. She closed her eyes, sure that this was the end. Nothing happened and when she opened her eyes again she saw a man in white standing with arms raised between her car and the truck. He was looking at the truck and she saw that he had wings. She was sure that this angel had saved her life. Sadly two women died and many were injured. The group are now trying to trace a man in a red car who stopped to help. People described him as a ministering angel at the roadside, as the full horror of the crash became apparent. Club organizer Barbara Jones said: He got us all to get off the bus quickly in case it exploded, then started wrapping us up in blankets. He even put people suffering from shock in his own car to keep them warm. We just want to thank him personally. Investigations, which are still being carried out, seem to suggest that the plane was carrying either uranium or sarin -- a nerve gas component. Residents in the immediate area have been complaining ever since of a variety of illnesses. Local people continue to describe the presence, soon after the crash, of a number of men in white -- they describe them wearing some sort of "protective clothing". Some reports say the men in white were moving about helping victims, aiding the dying, helping with rescue efforts, while others link their presence with the fact that the plane was carrying some toxic substance. Share International, November And in October , an unknown elderly woman helped the driver and three passengers out of their car when the vehicle landed upside down in a canal in Mijdrecht the Netherlands. The accident occurred when the car skidded, presumably because of the wet and oily road surface. The elderly woman helped the four to leave the car and took them to a dry part of the road. Astonishingly, not one of them was injured. When the accident victims wanted to thank the woman they found that she had disappeared. De Nieuwe Meerbode, the Netherlands.
