

Chapter 1 : IELTS Speaking test sample: Books & Films

International English Language Testing System (IELTS, pronounced ielts) is a test of English language proficiency. It is jointly managed by University of Cambridge ESOL Examinations, British Council and IDP Education Australia.

Cambridge IELTS 12 Sample Answer A couple of months ago I went to meet my best friend for lunch and she works in a design company, so I met her at her office and she showed me around it before we went out to eat. She is a fashion designer, and her office, or studio, is in a converted industrial building. It will vary from one environment to another, and it will also depend on what kind of work you do I suppose, but in general, you need a good desk or table to work at, and an ergonomically designed chair that gives you enough lumbar support, because most people who work in offices spend many hours sat at their desk, and unless you have a good chair, you can experience backache and other back-related problems after some time. Why do some people prefer to work outdoors? I suppose there might be various reasons. You can feel the sun and the breeze on your face and the whole dynamic is just better than being stuck indoors. Do you agree that the building people work in is more important than the colleagues they work with? Not necessarily, if you work with great people, the work environment might be less important. I suppose most people would be happy about it. But it could be problematic also, because people would have so much more free time to fill, and they might get bored. Of course, if they had plenty of money, then they would be able to do anything they wanted, but if they had limited money, they might have difficulty thinking of things to occupy their time with every day. Then you have to think about what other aspects of life would be like; I mean, if nobody worked, how would the world function? How would all the food arrive in the supermarkets? How would all the other products and things we need be supplied? Would we expect life to continue as now, or would we abandon technology and go back to growing our own food and making our own clothes? For many people, work is important because it gives them a sense of purpose in life, even though they might not enjoy it all the time. Are all jobs of equal importance? You could argue that they are. Most jobs exist because they are necessary, in some cases essential for life to function. We all depend on many other people to enable us to live our lives and do what we do every day. We rarely meet these people, and we may never even think about them, but all jobs, and the people who do them, are equally important. Why do you think some people become workaholics? There could be various reasons. And these kinds of people are usually highly successful and experts in their professional field. For example, if a person has an unhappy family life, they might choose to work more than normal to avoid spending time at home. Some people throw themselves into their work following a bad emotional situation, such as the loss of a spouse or following a divorce or relationship breakup, because it gives them a sense of purpose and stops them wallowing in pity or feeling sad. Such behavior can become a habit over time, and work fills the void left by the person they lost or broke up with. I prefer simple, but healthy food, although sometimes I indulge in treats, but mainly I eat a healthy diet. If you catch a cold, what do you do to feel better? I prefer to let my body deal with naturally. Do you pay attention to public information about health? And I also visit my doctor regularly for various check-ups. What could you do to have a healthier lifestyle? My lifestyle is already a healthy one. PART 2 Describe an occasion when you had to wait a long time for someone or something to arrive. About a year ago, my friend and I had a plan to meet up in Spain, and then go onto London for a vacation. We were arriving from different places, because I had been studying in California, and she had been working in Amsterdam for a year. So, the plan was to meet up in Spain and then fly together across to London. Unfortunately, I arrived in Madrid as scheduled but there was a problem with her flight, which was delayed until the next day, so she arrived later than scheduled. Thankfully, I found a hotel near the airport after a quick search online, and jumped in a taxi and went to spend the night there. It was good to relax, have a shower, change my clothes and have a decent meal, because I had been on a long hour transatlantic flight most of the day. I was really glad to get out away from airports and planes and into a comfortable room. When we did finally meet up, it was great and I felt a lot less tired than I had the day before, so maybe the long wait was beneficial for me – it gave me a chance to recover from the jet lag and traveling of the previous day. Then there are certain other situations such as arriving at the airport for an international flight, when you are required to arrive earlier than the departure time of the flight to allow time for everyone to check in and board without any problems. Being late just causes problems for everyone involved. In your country, how important it is to arrive early? Any later and people typically begin to get frustrated or lose their patience. It depends on the exact situation as to how important it is to arrive early. The more important the event, or situation, typically the more important it is to arrive at the right time, or early, to avoid any potential problems. How can modern technology help people to arrive early? But at the end of the day, people used to use diaries and paper-based planners, and maps, to organize their days, and arrive at places on time. That can all be done without technology – but technology just makes it easier. Being patient What kinds of jobs require the most patience? The ones that spring to mind are teachers, scientists, and people who have to work with other people, be it as therapists or simply in customer service, or dealing with the public. Teachers are generally very patient because the learning process, especially for children, can be complex, and they need to show a lot of patience and support if children are having difficulties. Scientists might have to work for a long time before they can obtain any positive results in their research or experiments, and sometimes they may need to wait patiently for years before seeing any conclusive results. As for people who work with other people, there are lots of jobs which require patience, and some more than others. For example, psychologists, might spend a lot of time patiently listening to people before being able to make any positive progress with their patients. Is it always better to be patient in work or when studying? Obviously, a lot depends on the particular situation. Do you agree or disagree that older people are more patient? Why do you think that is the case? In general, I would say yes, they are. Older people had more time to do almost everything, people today, especially younger people, are pushed to do more and more each day, all the time, and are therefore generally more impatient about getting things done. We expect everything to be done, or be available instantaneously, thanks to technology. I can remember trying to sing when I was at school, but it was awful, and everybody told me how bad it was. How often do you sing now? I might tap my foot or drum my fingers to the rhythm, but I never sing along. Do you have a favorite song you like listening to? One particular song, not really. I like to listen to lots of different songs. How important is singing in your culture? One of the most famous actors from [my country] is [name of actor] who is probably best known for their role as [a character in the film]. He or she usually stars in [genre: Okay, so in the last few years, all the big box office hits have been popular here. Some of the most popular and the superhero movies from Marvel, etc. Superman, Batman, The Avengers, and so on. Kids love them and usually drive their parents crazy whenever one of these movies is released in the cinemas nationwide. Then there are the others, the dramas, the action movies, and the romantic comedies which almost everybody loves. Although some people like watching independent films, and then, of course, there are the animated movies which are more targeted at kids. All the Disney movies and similar ones are super big hits with the young kids, and usually their parents too. What is the difference between watching a film in the cinema and watching a film at home? It depends on how you watch it at home. But generally, the experience in the cinema is better because you have the huge screen and surround sound, and it feels more like a special event. Especially if the movie has a lot of sound effects or special effects which are designed to be best appreciated on the big screen in a cinema. Do you think cinemas will close in the future? When everyone has a home theater system with a large screen and surround sound, there will be no need for cinemas. Being honest, I generally prefer to watch a movie at home rather than in the cinema. But, then, you could also say that restaurants survive even though people can cook their own food or order in pizza or any other kind of food. We have quite a strong history of drama, more than singing. How strong a tradition is it today in your country to go to the theatre? Most regular people prefer to go to the cinema or music concerts. Do you think the theatre should be run as a business or as a public service? Well, the theater is art, so it ideally should be supported by both the private and public sector. Accessible to people who might be interested in it, especially children. There is national theater group patronized by the government, and I think that one is enough. Others that want to produce drama for the theater should find their funding from private sources, donors, sponsors, etc. Most of them, online. I tend to buy a lot of sportswear online and sneakers, things like hoodies and sweatshirts or windbreakers.
