Thanks to this collection we will have a unique opportunity to choose from a great variety of lamps. Their designs are very interesting, you could even say that some have innovative and inspiring designs. This unique construction, featuring a smooth mirror reflection, comes from Denmark. Sculpture combined with light creates a uniquely artistic atmosphere in the decor. The base is made of durable metal with brass finish, holding an opaline glass shade for creating warm and romantic atmosphere. This one features the vintage American Art Deco style, white pressed glass and chrome finish with crystals. It is mounted on metal frame and fitted with glass lampshade. Suitable for residential and commercial premises. Tasteful accent for all kinds of interiors. Synthetic, geometrized and reductionist - these are the features of this style seen in this unique antique art deco table lamp. Its shape slightly resembles high wood in a modern-sacred edition with a silver finish. Bronze base guarantees elegance and long-lasting solidness. It has the following size: With an affinity for geometric shapes, cubism, and futurism, items that are antique art deco-styled are still very attractive for many homeowners, including lamps! Not only is the plethora of choices really confusing, but there are also critical factors that you need to be aware of. To help you make the shopping task enjoyable, this article is going to be a buying guide. Antique-Looking When shopping for an antique art deco lamp, you will usually run into lamps that are either a real antique or just antique-looking. The advantage of antique-looking is that you are sure about the build quality. A real antique comes with a lot of history, and it comes with authenticity. If you are shopping for a real antique art deco lamp, keep in mind that you have a lot of factors to consider in order to avoid buying something that is fake. For example, you need to assess the condition. You also need to know how to appraise an antique. Also, most of the times, knowing who to trust is more important than the item. Lighting Type At the end of the day, you are still buying a lamp. In interior design, lighting can be either ambient or task. Ambient lighting is for providing general illumination, while task lighting is for providing you with light to help with a particular task. The general characteristic of ambient lighting is it tends to project light upwards and sideways. On the other hand, task lighting primarily projects lighting downwards. Hence, before you shop for an antique art deco lamp, you need to know what kind of lighting you are looking for. This is because lamps that are excellent at ambient lighting does a poor job at task lighting, and vice versa. Of course, some lamps can do both. However, these kinds of lamp often fall into the "jack of all trades, master of none" situation. Table You also have the option of buying either a floor lamp or table lamp. A floor lamp often works well in communal areas of the house like the living room. Since floor lamps are also larger than table lamps, they are commonly used as ambient lighting. Table lamps are often used for creating a warm and cozy atmosphere. Also, table lamps are often excellent for task lighting. The golden arched frame and the metal base have the form of a sculpted eagle, which in its hissing face holds in an elegantly shaded shade in a frosted glass with shades of pink and purple. Glass lampshade in geometric shape is mounted on metal frame. Elegant and sophisticated addition for each room. This simple, but stylish chandelier is hanged on three ropes and it has glazed lampshade with a floral pattern in a shape of saucer. Miss mermaids in your nautical themed decor? How about combining these two qualities in just one art deco ceiling lamp? Amber glass with art nouveau pattern is enclosed in a silvery case.
