See instructions for fixing the problem. Her creative expansion began when she asked the Mad Hatter poet John Ashbery to come up with a list of titles for a body of work from which she would make paintings. The Contemporary Museum exhibits The following collections will be on display: Tuesdays-Saturdays; noon to 4 p. Free the third Thursday of each month. In connection with its current exhibits, artist Katherine Love will lead a workshop at The Contemporary Museum on photocopy transfer and collage techniques for paper and fabric, 10 a. With this exhibit, The Contemporary Museum has, rather puckishly, extended an invitation to anyone hungry for a visual and cognitive feast to swallow the pill that makes you larger and the one that makes you small, and follow your own white rabbit through the retrospective show. Hammond, an intelligent and loquacious Postmodern-plus artist, works within her own system. That is how a given image in a given context can stretch in form or core or sexuality. I think of my work as a fiction woven of facts. The "Sore Models II" on display is a large diptych 88 by 81 inches overall of foot-shaped canvases. The electricity is literally illustrated in the drawing of a homemade battery remember elementary science classes? Hammond is also a master of hidden details. As you may have already noticed, some of the titles produced multiple paintings. Games appeal to Hammond. A game board she found on the streets of Paris became inspiration for "Mad Elga. In this room, "Everything is connected to birds," she said. The arches are draped with a drying line suspended with black figures. Hammond answers in the powerhouse painting, "Wonderful You II. On a philosophical level the painting is about the multiplicity of selves that we all are. In many cases the idea for the painting comes to me completely, almost like a slide in a projector. After its completion, Hammond will start a new body of work, richer from the collaboration with Ashbery. It marked the first time she made a two-part painting, used new shapes of canvas and a new palette of colors, and worked with materials other than oil paints. This exhibition is a riot of stimulation and a perfect conduit for channeling creative ideas. The 10 tents that make up the city have traveled from Havana, New York, San Francisco, Spain, Germany and Los Angeles to Honolulu and were "inspired and designed as a Western city that you can carry with you everywhere you go," said Arrechea. Los Carpinteros intend to add more buildings such as a museum and an opera house. You can see a collection of architectural drawings some humorous for the city and future tent designs in the John Young Gallery of the Museum. Acquired through the Sibyl Heide Fund. His criteria for the selection process are simple. First, each work has to derive from or address the vessel tradition, whether functional or not. Second, each work has to have some technical finesse, be exquisite in some way and resonate with creative vision. The show has a handful of artists from different countries as well as a few homegrown. His vessel "Untitled Ewer St. This rock became a pendant studded with red faceted stones that is attached to the body of the vessel, which is slip-cast from a hand of raw ginger. This Washington-based artist-magician has the ability to turn a chunk of Chinese elm so thinly, and lacquer the finish so smoothly, that it looks like glass and weighs only 10 ounces. The 17 artists in this show definitely demonstrate what an exquisite vessel is. Each student was instructed to randomly draw up to three titles made up by Ojile out of a box and create the work in two dimensions. Students met difficult challenges in their individual style.
