We only left for part of one day to take the Jet Express over the Playa Del Carmen, just to see what has changed in the past year. Not much and not enough we liked to bring us back anytime soon to Playa! But, back to Melia We bought the all inclusive package for the week. When we were there, Nov 15, only one of the specialty restaurants was operating. We went one night but canceled reservations we had for other nights. We felt that we would rather eat at the buffet and choose our meals from many selections. Part of the inclusive package is for drinks. Those were plentiful and easy to get. Various bars are open at different times from The beer is only one brand. The liquor is pretty much what you would find at most bars but selective brands. We had no trouble finding what we needed. Some bartenders were very We really had a great time at the resort. Too bad about him. Our room was great. All that with a beautiful view! My thanks to Alex who checked us in upon arrival. Dos Ojos Located just 15 minutes drive from Tulum, Cenote Dos Ojos is one of the largest and probably one of the most famous cenotes in Mexico. The cave system of the cenote is known to be at least 61 km and m deep. You can take a colectivo from Tulum towards Playa del Carmen and ask the driver to drop you off at the cenote. The entrance is steep and narrow what makes the whole experience even more exciting. Carwash This cenote with a mysterious name is in Tulum, on the way to Coba. I was convinced that someone named it after many amazing plants, but I was wrong. This cenote is so close to the main road that people used to wash their cars there! Carwash has some incredible caves, so make sure you do some diving. You can get a colectivo from Tulum towards Coba â€” ask the driver to drop you off at Carwash cenote. Ik Kil Ik Kil is probably the most photographed cenote in the Yucatan. We ended up not even getting in as human-made stairs and crowds made the experience not fun at all. Gran Cenote Gran Cenote is a perfect cenote for everyone with its sandy bottom and bats living in the cave. The center garden includes palm trees, water lilies and elephant ears with a platform for sunbathing. Keep an eye out for toucans if you happen to be visiting during January or February as they tend to pop out of nowhere sometimes. You can take a colectivo from Tulum towards Coba and ask the driver to drop you off at the cenote. Azul Cenote Azul is one of my favorite cenotes. You can also meet some iguanas living in the bushes around. Although the place can get quite crowded everyone can find a spot to either relax or jump from a cliff. There are plenty of fish that will swim around your legs, so be prepared to be tickled a lot. If you can hold your breath for long enough there is a small underwater cave passage that you can free dive through. All three cenotes Azul, Eden, Cristalino are just 20 minutes away from Playa by public transportation. In order to get there, you need to jump on a colectivo â€” a Mexican minibus. You can take them from a stand located on Calle 2 Norte between Avenida 15 and 20 and ask the driver to drop you off at one you want to go to. Feb 17, at 5: You can jump off the climb or even a tree and chill on a terrace right above the cenote. The water is clear and you can find huge rocks in the center where you can swim to and rest. Look up Cenote Azul. Cristalino Cenote Cristalino is one of the groups of three cenotes next to each other, along with Azul and Jardin del Eden. This cenote has a half-cave you can swim through and see a contrast between the lighten up water and the one from the cave. Buy this swimwear here! This cenote is located on the road of cenotes near Puerto Morelos. Dzitnup The story says that this cenote was discovered after a pig fell down to it while being walked by his farmer. Dzitnup, also known as Xkeken, is one of the cenotes you need to go around noon when the light stream goes through the top and gives a great visual effect. You can also find some blackfish. Cenote Xoch A little town of Cenotillo has over cenotes. We searched for someone to show us one of them, literally going from door to door. Many locals were afraid of going to cenotes; telling us stories that some people who went never came back and their bodies were never found. When we finally managed to find a guide, he took us to this hidden gem where I immediately took over the raft. Drive to Cenotillo town and ask locals who can take you to some cenotes. Also, the cutest little cat came to me, then stayed with and cuddled the whole time purring. How to get there? It has a cool rope to jump from and apparently an underwater cave I failed to discover when I visited. Best Cenotes for Activities: Verde Lucero Verde Lucero is an open cenote with various small caves that you can explore and use some floaties. Like the majority of cenotes in the area of Puerto Morelos, it has a zipline and a cliff for jumping. Photo was taken with Matt from ExpertVagabond. Tamcach-Ha What makes this cenote special is the two platforms you can jump off. Want to read more about Mexico? Chapter 4 : The Best Cenotes in Mexico: Ultimate Guide | Anna Everywhere

En MÃ©xico, AzulÃ­n se divierte mirando los juguetes y las artesanias, observando a la gente antes de una fiesta, y bailando. [In Mexico, Blue Bug enjoys looking at the toys and crafts, watching people before the fiesta, and dancing with the jumping beans].

Mexico 25 Best Places to Visit in Mexico Whether you are already planning your next vacation, or just daydreaming about paradise beaches, beautiful towns and delicious food, Mexico should be on the top of your list of places to visit in Mexico has plenty of things to see and do. You should spend at least a few months traveling around the country just to get the sense of its diversity. Hopefully, this list will help you pick the ideal location in Mexico! Bacalar Lagoon in Quintana Roo, right next to the border with Belize. Crime, pollution and traffic mean that this was not a city for lingering. And for good reason, this is a truly exciting and energetic city. Mexico City has something for everyone. My favorite part about the city was the endless food options, including incredible gourmet restaurants like Pujol. We love traveling for food and Mexico City really wowed us. They are like the pyramids of Mexico. Coba is home to a wealth of amazing sites to explore, from Roman-like ball game courts to stele, which are large stone slabs with drawings and Mayan glyphs on them. I was amazed by Coba, set within a dense rainforest, home to beautiful birds, lizards and other wildlife, as well as breath-taking bromeliads and crazy cool trees growing out of rocks. But it was a particular part of Coba that sealed it as my favorite site in Mexico, Nohoch Mul. We took the long, hot and humid trek along the white road towards the pyramid and gradually between the trees emerged this epic sight. As I stood in its shadow I was in awe. Mayan Ruins of Tulum in Quintana Roo â€” Audrey from That Backpacker If you find yourself traveling somewhere along the Yucatan Peninsula, then you need to make the quick detour to visit the ruins of Tulum. These ruins once made up the Pre-Columbian walled city known as Zama and served as an important port. Sitting along a meter cliff that drops into the turquoise waters of the Caribbean, this archaeological site has one of the most beautiful settings you could ask for. For postcard-perfect shots, follow the trail towards the coast and then turn left for stunning views of the God of Winds Temple perched out next to the sea. Just steps from the beach you can immerse yourself in the history of this beautiful country. Keep your eyes peeled down every side streetâ€. Further along towards the center of 5th Ave there is another small ruin that most people simply walk by! Ruins of Teotihuacan near Mexico City â€” Alex from Crazy Sexy Fun Traveler Mexico is definitely my top country in the world and choosing one local destination I love the most is difficult. Located just 48 km Northeast from Mexico City can be visited on a bus day tour or by car. Since its establishment in around BC, it became probably the largest city in the pre-Colombian Americas. Then the city was left empty in AC until the Aztecs came in years after and named the unknown city Teotihuacan, the Place of Gods. Walking along the Avenue of the Dead fills me with unbelievable divine energy. But, this recently changed for me after visiting Tulum for the first time and falling head-over-heels for the quirky beach town. Driving into Tulum I immediately noticed a difference â€” instead of huge all-inclusive resorts, I saw boutique hotels and beachfront cabanas. Instead of cheesy chain restaurants, there were taco stands serving up a fresh fare. Instead of the streets being lined with tourist-trap jewelry stores, there were stylish boutiques and yoga studios. The city has a hippie vibe which will undeniably force you to relax no feat for me. I spent my days skirting around town on a beach cruiser, sampling organic culinary delights and strolling from beach bar to beach bar sipping perfectly concocted craft cocktails. Fortunately, even with the inevitable changes that have come to Tulum, it still has managed to keep that same low key vibe. With its sketchy wifi and lack of development, Tulum feels off the gridâ€ thatched hut cabanas line the beach, palms trees crisscross over dirt roads, and limited electricity at night make the moon and the stars all that much brighter. No need to dress up. A bikini and a pair of cut off shorts will get you through your trip flip-flops optional. For a hit of local culture, head into the town for a taco crawl at the many stands lining the streets. Not only is this tiny little island one of the most beautiful places I have ever been, but its Playa Norte is an exquisite soft sand beach on which to play and enjoy a cold Mexican beer. Do you like kiteboarding or stand up paddleboarding? Or diving with whale sharks? This is the place for you. The second you step outside the boat, you can walk barefoot on the island.

Only golf carts used as taxis and bicycles. There is so much more to this island than souvenir shops and day trippers. Many visitors to Cozumel find their way to Chankanaab National Park on the southern end of the island. We drove south along the coast and left the mass tourism of San Miguel in our rear view. Much to our delight and some surprise we found miles and miles of empty coastline just some thirty minutes outside of town. So, next time you are in Cozumel, rent a bicycle or scooter and explore the coast. You will be very pleasantly surprised by what you find!

Loreto in Baja California – Stephanie from Travelbreak Loreto in Baja is that secret, off-the-beaten-path Mexican destination that brings great luxury and hospitality at a smart price. Perfect to indulge in scenic hikes, clear waters and even better food. Get your first taste of Sayulita with paletas and fish tacos sold from roadside stands. The place is perfect for a romantic date, but could also be a fun spot for an evening with friends.

Colonial Towns – Sarah from Live, Dream, Discover Guadalajara is often overlooked in favor of the mega-metropolis of Mexico City, the abundant coastal beach towns or simply as a stopover on the way to Lake Chapala. This Colonial city manages to meld a lovely historic core full of impressive architecture with a vibrant and modern cultural and culinary scene. Spread between canyons, this long and narrow city has many winding streets and tiny alleys. Further enhancing its appeal, it features colonial architecture, colorfully painted buildings, unusual underground traffic tunnels. This is an easy place to visit made even more attractive by its year-round beautiful weather, a plethora of very good restaurants and fun activities. We spent our days exploring local markets, taking a city tour on a trolley bus and eating lots of pan dulces pastries!

Beyond its tasty culinary tradition, Oaxaca is a dynamic, lively city. All in one night! San Cristobal de las Casas is a gorgeous small colonial cities, but the natural wonders, archeological sites, traditions and cultures of this state should not be overlooked. This is a place where it is possible to find mountains and tropical jungle, the natural pools of Agua Azul and the archeological sites of Tonina – still little known to tourists – and Palenque. Yet, what I love the most about Chiapas is the presence of indigenous communities that struggle to keep their culture and identity alive. I think it is due to my previous job in academia when I researched on the protection of the cultural identity of minorities and indigenous peoples. To date, the Mayan communities of Chiapas wear their traditional clothes, live a traditional way of life and follow a religion that is a mixture of Christian beliefs and their own traditions. I have had the chance of seeing their rituals in the church of San Juan Chamula and in their private homes: Every building in the center is painted bright, sunshine yellow. Is there much to do in Izamal? Is it conveniently located? Spend some time here and just try to be unhappy. As you roam the sleepy cobblestone streets, as you wander the 16th-century Franciscan monastery. Be happy, forget your worries for a little while, go to Izamal. Walking through the city center, you can soak in the colonial atmosphere while wandering into the many museums, churches, theatres, and government buildings that are open to the public. The lively street fiestas heat up on the weekends after the sun goes down. On Sundays, taking to bicycles is a perfect way to tour the city during the Bici-Ruta when the city closes the streets to vehicle traffic. After all of these memorable day trips, you then have the pleasure of winding down the evening in this charming city. The truth is the city is amazing on its own with beautiful buildings and great nightlife in the zocalo plazas. But one of my favourite things about Merida is all of the great food like tamales, panuchos – Mexico is so much more than tacos. It was established to protect a large number of American crocodiles in a dense mangrove swamp. But it makes a pleasant haven also for iguanas and many species of birds, the most exotic of which is the bright pink roseate spoonbill.

Hierve el Agua pools in Oaxaca – Cacinda from Points and Travel Sometimes you just want to feel like you are in another world. And this is one of those places: Hierve El Agua, Oaxaca. It was also at one time a sacred site to the ancient peoples of the Oaxaca valley, the Zapotecs. I love Oaxaca City and this was one of my favorite day trips to take from there. The biggest hole on the ground, about 10m in diameter, serves as the entrance to this cenote. It was smaller than other cenotes we visited but it was special. The cozy feel of the cave-like swimming hole was perfect for just a few people. After a hot day of biking around Tulum, swimming in Cenote Calavera was definitely the best way to rejuvenate. Once you get out of the colectivo, you can cross the road, pass through the restaurants and find one of the most insanely picturesque beaches you are ever likely to see. White sand, swaying palm trees, crystal clear water. Just a little swim from the shoreline into the soft green sea grass you will spot these beautiful animals floating along with the colorful fishes.

Although there are not many fish, there are many types of rays in the area. Be cautious when entering the water and slide your feet along the sand to avoid getting stung. Please also respect the turtles, maintaining a safe distance. Avoid swimming above them so they can safely surface to breathe when needed.
