In 1929, he left the Ecole des Beaux-Arts and traveled to Brittany with his mother. Still Life with Fish. Still life, 81xcm, In December of that same year his first solo exhibition, organized by Guy Weelan and Michel Brient, was held at the Art Impressions book shop in Paris. Also in 1929, Emmanuel David offered Buffet an exclusive contract with his gallery, shared with art dealer Maurice Garnier. A painter first and foremost, Buffet produced religious pieces, landscapes, portraits and still-lives. A total of 52 Theme Exhibitions have taken place since His Hanged Men and Horror of War series, which feature angular, emotionless figures and images of sheer brutality, are examples of his subjects and representative of his classification as a "Miserabilist de Gruber and Francois Rouault" Expressionist movement. Renting a small house in Manosque from his friend Jean Giono in 1930, Buffet then moved to Nansé, near Reillanne, some 17 kilometres from Manosque, where he remained until 1931. In 1931, the magazine Connaissance des Arts named the ten best post-war artists, listing Buffet as 1. Watercolor on paper, Collection of Mass Moss, Geneva. Photo of Buffet with Painting. In 1932, at the age of 30, his first retrospective was shown at the Galerie Charpentier. His subject matter, welcomed in a post-war Paris and appreciated in New York, combined with his youth and good looks propelled him to the top of the art world. Although research reveals no romantic interludes, it is safe to say that Buffet would have had romantic involvements by the age of 25. Nevertheless, on December 12, 1932, he married for the first and only time, wedding French writer and actress Annabel Schwob. The union produced daughters Virginie and Danielle, in 1934 and 1935 respectively, and son Nicolas, in 1936. While his paintings were not necessarily "pretty," the thirst for a modern ideal created an appetite for his stark, somber images expressing intense emotion. His style focused on the older, more conservative statutes of art, such as drawing, while playing on the ongoing popularity of Existentialism. La Couette and Woman. Narrative painting, xcm, Figure portrait; featured in New York Times article. In keeping with his mode of theme production, Buffet produced a series of religious works, scenes from the life of Christ. He also did a series of flayed figures, which go back to his works of war tragedies. His stark figures and use of warm tones echoed the grievances of World War II, specifically those of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Oil on canvas, xcm, It was here he spent his remaining days. He was one of the first artists to depict Paris itself in a cubist style, likely due to the oppression of the city during his formative years. It is possible that the sheer expense of paints contributed toward his propensity toward the sparing use of paint on the canvas; and he used very little color, working primarily in grays, black, "bistres" and greens. Drypoint on paper, 27x41 in. His style is defined by "dry" straight lines revealing the shape of buildings and bodies. His works show elongated, emaciated figures and structures and lend a feeling of despair and loneliness. He shows Paris itself, traditionally portrayed as lively and colorful, in a hard and lifeless manner. This fundamental and visually heavy approach actually shows us the underlying beauty of such a popular and visually pleasing city. After moving around France, he eventually settled in the southern region near Tourtour in 1936. Oil on canvas, 35x51in. On October 4, 1969, at age 71, he chose to end his life, committing suicide in his home in southern France by placing a plastic bag over his head and taping it shut around his neck. Six years later, his wife, Annabel, died on August 3, at age 71.
