Miami , more than a decade later. Ike takes a dive head first into the snow. Also in the pilot, Pip says "God bless us, everyone" at the end, with a dazed Cartman declaring to kick his ass as soon as he gets up. The song is originally from Sweet Charity. Hat arguing is a likely parody of the film Magic, where a ventriloquist has multiple personality disorder, and argues with his puppet. Garrison walks down the street with his new purchase, everyone calls out "Nice gun". Everyone comments, " that sure is a Nice pig, Doc" etc. Cartman appears on Geraldo. Well considering one of the stars of that show was Patrick Duffy, whom Scuzzlebutt had for a leg John Rambo serves with a soldier named Danforth. The Lava and You film is a clear parody of s nuclear safety films, which suggested "duck and cover" as an effective tactic when under nuclear attack. Scuzzlebutt sounds exactly like Ludo from Labyrinth when he says, "Friend. Tell them there are gay animals here who need homes, desperately. Mephisto and his assistant Kevin are homages to Dr. He quotes the novel and will later star in an episode based on it. The part where Terrence yells, "Daddy, Nooooooooooooo! The whole episode is very Return of the Living Dead , especially doctors describing the symptoms. Puffy the Bear, who looks exactly like Smokey Bear. Chef trying to explain to the doctor that everyone is turning to zombies could be a reference to the novel, I Am Legend. Chef performs a dead-on parody of Thriller. Stan faced with having to kill his zombie girlfriend could be a nod to Evil Dead 2. The last shot, with the little bunch of flowers and the arm coming out of the grave was a likely homage to the end of Carrie The canned food drive based on The Cash Grab. The end battle spoofs Braveheart. Kyle mentions both MacGyver and Full House. Hankey is reminiscent of Mickey Mouse. Hankey in a box and his initial inactivity in the presence of others causing Kyle to be put in an asylum is similar to plot devices around Michigan J. Frog from " One Froggy Evening ". Damien The whole episode has myriad references to The Omen , not the least of which is the title character. The Megaman toys are based on Power Rangers. They were actually going to be Power Ranger toys in an early script draft, but the Comedy Central legal team asked that the name be changed to avoid copyright issues. Stan quotes Star Trek: Ten years from now. The Japanese princesses in the shell are the ones whom Mothra has to rescue in Tokyo in his first film. Kyle says to Robert Smith that Disintegration is the best album ever! The clock is borrowed from Flava Flav. In the episode, Terrence needs to rescue his daughter. Hussein says, "I changed my mind. A shadow of a dinosaur can be seen on the generator, later. Kenny completing the circuit with his hands is similar to current running through Doc in Back to the Future. Cannibalism under extreme conditions was the subject of Alive , which also featured the song Ave Maria. Barbrady and Cartman are both seen filming episodes of Cops. Schwartz paraphrases Luke from Return of the Jedi when speaking about circumcision in the family. The picture of conjoined twins is not of conjoined twins, but members of the musical group The Monkees. When Pip throws his final throw against the Chinese team, the way he spins, throws the ball, then slowly stops spinning, is reminiscent of the Death Blossom scene in The Last Starfighter. Hinton, a short novel about four friends who were in a gang. His friend dies saying these words: The title of the episode is also from Star Trek. The roofies truck driver bears a resemblance to Elvis Presley , who was a truck driver before he became a singer. The scene of the bus breaking in half and the boy falling out through the rear window is partially derived from The Lost World: Jurassic Park , when the dinosaurs had pushed the trailers almost over the cliff. The lead actors hold on to the interior of the rear trailer as debris falls past them and out the back window and door. A similar effect is shown in Titanic , when passengers let go of railings and fall to their deaths note that the bus, like the ship, has split in two. The video made by the parents echoes " We Are the World. Uncle Remus is mentioned in place of Uncle Sam. Garrison goes to see Dr. The boys picking up their instruments and beginning to play as the snake is destroying South Park is reminiscent of the musicians on the deck of the Titanic Everyone being covered with ash at the end might have been a reference to the final scene of Volcano. Hanky did together is similar to the one in the Frosty the Snowman special where Karen remembers all that Frosty did with her and the other kids after Frosty melts away. Hanky and Me

The portal references the episode Assignment: Carol McCormick also has reactions from the film when her son dies. The way Stan deals with his spooky goldfish comes from Poltergeist , when a boy is afraid of a clown doll. The spinning Barbra Streisand transitions are a reference to old s hero shows like Batman and Robin. The Indian Burial Ground pet store references Pet Sematary , in which pets buried there come back evil. Steve Irwin, the Crocodile Hunter , is caricatured here. Rainforest Shmainforest Miss Stevens strung up between two trees and the giant Yanogapa rising from the brush is an homage to King Kong The sequence in which Chef appears to Cartman and tells him the rescue was a dream comes from a scene in The Last Temptation of Christ by Nikos Kazantzakis, in which Jesus is given a chance on the cross to live the rest of his life. Later, he finds out that it was all a dream and he is still dying on the cross. The visuals are reminiscent of both Archie music videos and Scooby-Doo. The Succubus Cartman was called "Piggy" by the Optometrist. In Lord of the Flies , a brilliant but obese orphan boy was called "Piggy" by all of his friends, and he wore glasses. He mentioned how his eyesight was terrible without the glasses. Cartman in his glasses is mistaken for Jonathan Lipnicki from Jerry Maguire. Craig The horn music before the first fight is definite Rocky. Jakovasaur Junjun talks like a Gungan , but Jakov is just loud. Parker commercials seen in Southern California: Parker got me 2. Another clear shout-out is to Aliens. To make the effect complete, whenever the Angels show up, variations on their theme music is heard. The song both the ATF and Mr. Jewbilee Elder Schwartz wears a diamond design with a Star of David in it, similar to the Superman emblem. As a result, the episode never aired in the United States The scene in which Sharon tells Mr. Garrison to "Get on the wire to every parent around the country and tell them how to bring those sons of bitches down! Chapter 2 : CONTENTS - Hyksos

The greatest story never told by Lana Corrine Cantrell; There's no description for this book yet. Book 'Em Dano, Then Beam Me Up, Scotty! Edition Notes.

The best ones not only propel their show into the limelight, but eventually take a life of their own, sometimes getting into the dictionary, sometimes even electing a president. No one thought it would become a catchphrase. The sitcom is seen by more than 60 million people in more than 60 countries. Uttered by Robin Burt Ward whenever he was dumbfounded, this silly phrase helped make the show a hit. During the first season, which aired two nights a week, Batman was fresh. But by the end of the second season, the plots were all recycled and the "Holy whatever, Batman! The awesomeness that is Gary Coleman: Sock it to me! From the end of the show: An unsuspecting person usually Judy Carne would be tricked into saying "Sock it to me! Viewers loved it; they knew what was coming every time, and they still loved it. It quickly became an "in" thing to get socked. This catchphrase was more than popular - it may have altered history: On September 16, , presidential candidate Richard Nixon appeared on the show. HE was set up in the standard fashion but surprised everyone by changing the command into a question: Beam me up, Scotty From: Although Captain Kirk William Shatner never actually said this exact phrase the closest version he came was on the Star Trek animated series: The Fonz was added as a "bad influence" to give the show more of an edge. When Ron Howard left the show in , Winkler was given top billing. Blast From the Past: And what was Fonzie like? One of them sheepishly answers, "Coo-ol. Two thumbs up How do they get along behind the scenes? But "two thumbs up" means a whole lot more to the movie industry. Their opposite tastes in movies assured moviegoers that if both of these guys liked the movie, chances are you would too. Filmmakers also took note of the growing popularity of the phrase; they watched the show each week, hoping their latest project would get two thumbs up. If so, it was plastered all over movie ads. Because "two thumbs up" means big box office. At the beginning of each episode, the vertically-challenged Tattoo Herve Villechaize shouted this phrase to alert his boss, Mr. Roarke Ricardo Montalban , that "de plane" was coming. The phrase did so much for Fantasy Island that in Villechaize asked for the same salary as Montalban. Instead, he was fired. Ratings dropped off dramatically and the show was cancelled after the following season. This line actually made its television debut on the British TV serial Dr. Its more recent use by the Borg, aliens out to assimilate humans, made it a household phrase. It has even become a response to the growing power of corporations and governments. We will add your biological and technological distinctiveness to our own. You will be assimilated. Even though Hawaii Five-O ran for 12 years, more people today remember this catchphrase than the show itself. To say the catchphrase is part of pop culture is an understatement: TV commercials selling LifeCall personal emergency response system in the s. But somehow it outlasted the company that advertised it bankrupt and the woman who said it died. Oh my God, They Killed Kenny! A bigger part of what made South Park a hit was the tasteless but innovative routine of killing off the same character in nearly every episode. It was funny the first 38 or 40 times we did it. Flintstones co-creator Joe Barbera tells the story: God knows where he got it, but it was one of those terrific phrases. He actually never said it. George and the Dragonet," which featured the line: This one wins out over many other famous TV sports sayings because of the controversy it created. After hearing others imitating his famous battle cry, Michael Buffer and his brother Bruce decided to trademark it, a decision that made them both millionaires. But if you feel like yelling the "rumble" phrase out loud, do it quietly; the Buffer brothers will sue the pants off of you if you say it at an event without paying them. They even sued Ollie North. Why such big safeguards on such a trite saying? famed line from another show of the same era: 'Beam me up, Scotty.' Okay, but the line "Beam me up, Scotty" was never uttered on Star Trek. So I'd say the moral of this story is that IMDB is not a reliable source of information.

January 21, at Today is Saturday, January 21, Squirrels are members of the family Sciuridae and are indigenous to the Americas, Eurasia, and Africa. In general, ground-dwelling species are social animals, often living in well-developed colonies but the tree-dwelling species are more solitary. However, some squirrels also consume meat, especially when faced with hunger and squirrels have been known to eat insects, eggs, small birds, young snakes, and even smaller rodents in adverse conditions. Squirrel Appreciation Day is an opportunity to enjoy and appreciate your tree climbing, nut gathering friends. It is celebrated in mid-winter when food sources are scarce for squirrels and other wildlife. So, give your bushy-tailed friends an extra special treat today to supplement their winter diets. They are particularly fond of sunflower seeds and dried corn. International Sweatpants Day International Sweatpants Day was created to commemorate the former fashion sin â€” sweatpants. Due to their convenience, today, sweatpants are often seen as the ideal casual wear. Sweatpants have traditionally been ash-gray in color, but now companies put considerable effort into making them more attractive to the consumer in order to increase sales, while at the same time retaining the same comfort as the originals. The idea of National Hugging Day is to encourage everyone to hug family and friends more often. Scientific studies have demonstrated that hugs are beneficial to our health. A hug can lower your blood pressure, trigger the release of healthy hormones like oxytocin , and relieve stress. Doctors recommend a minimum of hugs per day for our emotional and physiological well-being, but more is always better. The record for most hugs given in one hour by an individual is 1, Nick Vujicic achieved this feat at an expo center in Oregon in Considering the litigious nature of society today, it is advisable to obtain permission before hugging someone if you are unsure of the responseâ€”especially a stranger. Chapter 4 : Factacular : Catch Phrases

In truth, it's the exact opposite of that, because they said "Book 'em, Danno" on Hawaii Five-0 all the time. Take a wild guess at how many times "Beam me up, Scotty" is used on Star Trek. If you guessed any number other than zero, congratulations, you're wrong!

But in retrospect, well after the actual ceremony, the reference to the caterers took on an ironic perspective. Jim MacArthur soon followed, accompanied by the ever-vivacious "H. Zoulou received an especially warm welcome from his fellow-cast-members. He navigated the numerous steps down to the reserved-for-Five-0 seating area remarkably capably, but Dennis Chun and I stayed close by, just in case. The attendees were just mind-boggling. Also making the pilgrimage from California was Beau Van den Ecker. Communication with him was difficult because of his medical condition. But he brought along, in addition to his caregiver Katharine, a photo album of memories made during a life-time of show business, and I was very privileged to be take a quick peek. There were many others with Five-0 connections in the audience. Charlotte Simmons and Chris, both back-stage production folks, were glad to be there too. Unfortunately, no name tags were on hand at this get-together, and it seemed that relatively few who were recognizable to me from the show, made it to the Academy Courtyard after the ceremony to socialize. She herself had been quite properly recognized at the Na Hoku Hanohano Awards earlier in the year. Here is something of how it went: In that career spanning more than four decades, James MacArthur has portrayed everything from a crazed killer to a stalwart defender of law and order. We know him best as Danno in the hit series Hawaii Five In his role as Lt. Many have tried; few have succeeded. Hawaii Five-0 continues as the standard for all productions in existence in our Aloha State. Thank you, I never dreamed the booking business would get me this far. In fact, I now belong to a society, the initials of which are C. What Lennie told me then was, this show would be a hit. Because we were in a time when it was the Vietnam War and the country was involved in a very tough time for the world -- it was a gray world. And this would not be so on Five Unhappily, Lennie passed on after the sixth season. Rose, please stand up. You know, everything was so new when we started the show, so untried. The first day, we shot a master shot, after which Zoulou got in his car and went home. Then it came time for close-ups and he was nowhere to be found. Kam had been a real policeman so he knew how to authenticate all the little pieces of the business to help make McGarrett a real detective. We worked hard, we joked hard. On the sound stage there was another set which was a bedroom. So Zoulou decided to take a little catnap and I went behind the flap and began to make snoring noises. But he got me back, in spades, more than once. It is fitting that Hawaii Five-0 should receive this honor tonight because in many ways it was the crucible in which the Hawaiian film industry was forged. There were other shows since, but our show developed a wonderful stable of local-talent actors and technicians and we wish there were more shows for them to do, especially a long-running series. And there are well over a dozen web-sites devoted to the show and its actors. Just last week I got a little note from a fellow in Arizona who wrote, "You booked more criminals than any of us in our entire career, and you did it in under an hour, Signed, your fan, retired DEA Special Agent. And thanks to you, Jerry, and all the many fans like you, for your continued support. Hawaii Five-0 is seen in millions and millions of homes around the world. The honor means the world to me, and I share it with all the people who are here in the audience tonight as well as with those who could not be here. Seeing those film clips and everyone that we liked in the show brings back a lot of memories for me. Again, thank you so much, and congratulations. Jim, the many, many in the fan group whose lives you have touched through Five-0 and other ways, acknowledge you with profound respect, thankfulness and affection. You suggested that the wonderful get-together that had just been enjoyed was not an end at all, but more the beginning of a celebration of the life of Hawaii Five-0, because it goes on and on and on, around the world. Aloha nui, Jerry Pickard November 6, It was indeed an occasion to remember, and I am most grateful to those who made it possible for me to attend on this terrific evening. Unrelated to the show, but illustrative of how, with things Hawaiian, so much is possible, is this vignette: Amber looked at me funnily, and said yes, how had I guessed that. Auwe to da max! Some photos which I took that night, may be found on websites that feature James MacArthur. The event at the Doris Duke

Theater brought out some of the local actors and MacArthur pals who played major roles in the series: Altho show co-star, his always friendly persona with cast and crew belied his stature compared to Jack Lord, who made sure everyone knew who the star was. MacArthur is the adopted son of theatrical royalty. His father Charles MacArthur was the eminent playwright of numerous Broadway hits, including the legendary Front Page. His mother, actress Helen Hayes, has for generations been acknowledged as the First Lady of the Theater. The big opu is gone, and his mustache made him almost unrecognizable at first. And true, was close to passing away. And, of course, that gave our state a big tourist boost. Hawaii Five-0 and Magnum P. To have the opportunity to spend a fairly leisurely Maui morning with her, is almost indescribable. Our get-together in February was indeed an occasion of special gratitude for this writer. Awareness of Emma began for me in about Rather, her somewhat unorthodox adaptation of the usual fare of Hawaiian music was being heard on Honolulu radio. Unorthodox, because she was not known for singing traditional Island tunes, having been well-schooled in classical vocals. The growing hotel industry also encouraged her endeavors, because she attracted to her performances many upscale attendees who were eager to sample a form of music apart from the usual steel guitar and ukulele. At the start of her career, she sang at clubs as well as the renowned and recently restored, through the financial help of many benefactors including Marie Lord , Hawaii Theatre downtown. With respect to the latter, it was the custom then for stage shows to be offered between films, and Emma told me she was considered "a good fit" for such fill-ins. A little Five-0 interjection here: There is no substitute for talent and when that talent is rich and varied and finely honed, it makes for an exceptional performer. Unique might be a better word. You have just given yourself a present with Mahalo, Emma of the golden voice, for an evening in Paradise! She was absorbed in reading for an upcoming community theatre production, possibly Carousel. He asked her if that was a script in her hand, and she acknowledged it was. A brief conversation followed, which she then put out of her mind. Even more of a coincidence, however, was the discovery that the Lords lived in the same Kahala condominium complex—albeit on different floors--as Emma and the man who would become her new husband, Hal Lewis. The four became very close friends. In one instance, the favour was returned when it became known that the Lords would be unable to make it to a certain venue at which Emma would be opening. But, back to earlier times. The Vearys were far from wealthy people, and the additional income from any family member was most welcome. Instead, she attended Kamehameha Schools However, she was just a little over a year from graduating when a marriage took place. It lasted a decade, and produced two daughters. During this time, Emma was becoming well credentialed, and in demand in many parts of the planet. She recalled one occasion, when she had contracted with impresario Max Bygraves to do Cabaret in England. Somehow, a directive was given to her that when she would be entering the very posh London Savoy Hotel, she was to do so via the rear doors. Emma rightly, of course challenged this and clarified to the powers-that-be that unless she was permitted to gain entrance through the hotel lobby, she would not be sharing her vocals. Emma struck the writer as being an extraordinarily inherently happy person. But others would remember her too And she mentioned that she had recently been approached for some background information regarding the Lords, by the J. Paul Getty Museum in Los Angeles. Aku and his bride did move from the Kahala condominium complex, but not far. They were able to afford what Emma described as an estate on Kahala Avenue. Jack was an admirer of the rare tropical plants which adorned much of the premises. If that happened, he said, the place would be wrecked and although the production company would pay for restoration, it would never be the same again. They took that advice. Later, they divorced after 11 years of different lifestyling e. It sounded as if they had had many splendid times together. Both enjoyed a good joke. Emma related the details of just one to me. They had been invited to some kind of pompous opening at the Kahala Hotel.

Chapter 5 : Book em Danno v. Dano

Book em Dano Eat my grits Good morning Mr Phelps I don't think so Tim I can't think of any for recent TV shows. Is it my memory or that recent shows I watch don't have catch lines? Is it my memory or that recent shows I watch don't have catch lines?

Page The last chapter of every authors book is always where he or she reflects on what was written and just sits back, relaxes, and writes! And I shall do that here, We have journeyed a long way in the story of the Ennead , not as far as I would have liked to have gone for I would have liked to have covered the stories of Homer and a history of Christ but I feel that future books would best be devoted to this. However, as a student of physical anthropology I have found these histories most fascinating as they searched for the archetypal men and women through the ages. Basically, the noses were always shown straight with no curvature, the cheekbones high and wide and the classic jaw lines of the men. It is very hard today to find anyone who fills all the criteria of what Aristotle called the "Divine Child," those whose genetic lineages harkened from the blood of the Gods. It is very hard today to pick up a book on psychology, physiology, etc. Zeus who was more upright as the Egyptian Ra was turned into a drunken licentious debauchery of the Gods, thereby man could excuse his own indiscretions and the rest of theogony fell as well. Today, movie stars fill the same roles the Gods once did. In the old days of Hollywood the studios took care to see as little scandal as possible surrounded their "stars" for whether they knew it or not consciously, since they emulated archetypes, they would set the trend for lifestyles and behavior before a people who have little control over their thinking and emotions because of their inborn weaknesses. We have seen through the years the glamour of Hollywood change as the people of America changed and as society degenerated more, we, like the Greeks and Romans, like our "Gods" slovenly, licentious, crude and immoral to fit the declining lifestyles. Now, when they live together, take drugs, have illegitimate babies, everyone has someone to look up to as a model to condone their own misconducts. Or, they tell of using drugs which is the bottom of the scale of life on the way to extinction, and no one tells them what refuse of biology they truly are. We have a local commercial, from a hospital of course, where a man gets on the TV and states that despite his cocaine habit and losing his wife, car, kids, despite all this he did not lose his health! That was the first thing he lost for he lost so many ceils the first time he took it that there is no possible way he would have regained his total mental and physical being again and if he ever breeds more like him, lord help us, for the offspring are absolutely of no worth whatsoever and you and I will foot the bill when they do the same, if not worse than the father, for these people have no respect for themselves or life. Acting was always basically a male action to test his abilities to remain in control of his physical and mental processes and through the ages it was frowned upon for women to pursue the role. I refer the reader back through the book as to why men Page are more attuned for it. It was just a matter of time before the women entered the theater as androgyny hit them and they were at the time considered those particular teratisms of nature we have in abundance today and Hollywood is very full of them where the androgynous woman found her niche and today the screen is full of tough, aggressive women. However, a very small minority of gynics find acting fulfilling for they are playing out roles that match genetic engrams of their ancestors. Men do this also. Many men and women have found acting to their liking if they have an androgyne problem as well for they can fulfill through acting roles in life they might not be able to pursue. There are also few actors who can live up to the role models they portray even though they show the fine traits, for as we have seen, diet and environment plays a great role here. Aristotle knew his "Divine Child" suffered greatly if not treated properly and these "lions among the cattle" as they were also referred to as, could find life most hard because of their genetic purity which was not always fed right, should we say. I do not intend to go into actresses for as stated they are mostly quite androgynous although there are exceptions, but few. Today it seems the movies have no concept what the prototype is anymore as most actors today are guttural examples of the decayed man. The "Divine Children" are hard to find. There are still a few who fit this ideal in the movies and a few more around the world. I would like to point out four men especially first here, for if you bear any resemblances to diem it may help you as well. Anytime physical anthropologists or physiologists gather socially it seems there are the first in conversations about the cinema. But before we go on this little tour I would like to state I make no claims as to what these people are in real life, I, like so many, only know them from the screen, I know by looking at them what they should be like and the roles they play would never have been successful had they not fit the role physically. The people about to be reviewed have never, to my knowledge, been in any scandal or anything derogatory said about them which does add to the validity of their genetic make-ups. Also, we must figure that their looks may not be truly genetic but a response to something ingested or done by the mother in gestation or they could be atavisms as well, but the latter would be genetic unlike Page the former condition. But this is no boast on my part, for everyone has had such somatypes in their heritage at one time or another which contributes to their great popularity, especially amongst intellectual peoples. When people find you are studying physiology or psychology it seems that movie stars are the favorite topic, but for me these people always meant a little something more for their features are unique and from the golden ages of time. People all over the world seem fascinated by these four men because of the fact they are archetypes, namely, Charlton Heston, Jack Lord, Roger Moore and James Garner. Both men and women find them fascinating because the men see in them the prototype figure of man and for the women they represent the type of man who rarely walks the earth anymore for these are the composite features spoken of by the ancients, the eclectic or Renaissance Man. They are all the basic somatypes, with of course variations, but their physiques are quite unique because we seldom see people with a uniform figure. Their faces have very archaic features seldom seen. I believe I heard that James Garner is part Cherokee, which I can believe for he looks very much we all have the same straight noses! James Garner has very classic facial features seldom seen anymore. Jack Lord has an excellent jaw-line as do all the others, which I refer the reader back to the chapter on physiology as to why this is important for these type jaws are very rare now. Roger Moore does not have the high cheek bones of the others but his other facial hallmarks make up for it. Jack Lord even has the large lobeless Egyptian ears if you will remember the statements on them. Lord has the rather thickened eyelids which are a biological bonus, for reasons already stated concerning zinc. His character of Steven McGarrett was a plus for him as his features matched the character of an ultra-andric man, non-smoking, non-drinking, upright and honest. How much he lives up to the features on his face that reveal this I have no idea. All the others show this too for these are the few men left who have the true andric features that are quickly dying out. All would make very good business people as well, in fact there are few things in this world they could not do if they applied themselves, for people who have an art talent that they have through acting are good at other things as well. People going to Hawaii come back with the wildest rumors about him, he is a mystery like a living Rosetta stone, people just find his features most intriguing. These men as described usually marry very gynec women, there is none of this - that is my money and this is hers, business, for the marriages are usually for life with an equal sharing in all things. I always was fascinated by these people for they resembled people in my lineages particularly Jack Lord, resembling so I am told by my parents, my great-grandfather and his sons, even down to his famous smile. But I point this out because it does not necessarily mean relatedness for in our world of peoples where cross-mating is done people often pop up with the same genetic features and also food consumption as stated can influence this too, something I wish the evolutionists would learn. I think this is why I found Mr. Lord more interesting for as a little girl it was not hard to find me on the night his show, STONEY BURKE was on for there I sat in my braids and cowgirl skirt and boots equating him with my father who grew up on a ranch in Oklahoma and later became a horse soldier, having made the army his career and later was a policeman. I was always in front of the TV when "Maverick" was on! I was never much for being movie star struck and people only interest me if they have good features I can relate to. I remember when a local program was going to show a study of whales which Mr. Lord was going to narrate. Reluctantly they did, and when they did they were hooked to the cause of the whales! Again, when you have an archetype involved with such important issues as the whales, people will listen and take heart. I think that special did more to win the people to the cause of the whales than any environmental group has ever done. Animals have a very serious problem for they cannot always help themselves from the misfortunes we place them in. Just the same I would personally like to thank Jack Lord and James Garner for the Page many hours of entertainment but mostly for letting me see some of those in my own lineages who have passed away "come alive" again. Well, like the others, I think someone could devote an entire book just on the features of Charlton Heston who did not play Ben-Hur and Moses for nothing! He fit into these characterizations for his features are like all the others, straight out of those times. I had heard that he was of Scottish origins which would certainly prove much of what I have said through these pages. If you will recall what Dr. He seems to have busted his nasal septum but his other features transcend this blemish. He has been so successful for he is very versatile in his features and acting. As stated Ben-Hur was a real person and seems to be a take-off of Yudhisthira of the Veda. These people age very slowly because of this, but refined foods are their biggest downfall and if any ever get face lifts it is not so much old age as sugar and alcohol which is very poisonous to these fine structures. People like this are very quick to lose up to 20 years in their features when they return to their biological diets, I have seen this often. One of the things in their profession that is against them, but can be easily helped, is that those heavy lights drain all the vitamin A from their systems and they appear to age very rapidly, despite their very youthful facial structures, but all they usually need is a good deal of beta-carotene and no face lifts are ever needed. These people do not decay as others though they can show malnutrition which is taken for aging. Their skins are white and, like all of us, they do have difficulty with ultra-violet light. I do not know, I believe they all have children, but if you will recall my statement about the element arginine in our systems which in people who show these features can be a great problem for they often do not have children as the men need extraordinary amounts of it because of their nutritional demand for a more soundly structured genetic matrix. And, as I said, silly as it sounds, they will often crave peanuts and other foods which have arginine in it but if they are on sugar this will dull its affects. This is the main reason these genotypes are dying out today, and as we saw it may be the well-laid plans of Gods and men for these people are often of the most sterling, make that golden, characters, who are an asset to mankind rather than a detriment. They also are known to have rather unusually strong hearts, the so-called "Lion-Heart," but smoking, alcohol, refined foods, will break it down. There were no other movies save the ones with Mr. Heston whom he had as a role model who brought history to life. But the movie that most changed his life was his portrayal of General Charles Gordon in the Page spectacular KHARTOUM, My brother was a military historian specializing in Scottish history but after seeing the film he included the history of these times in his studies and even became an Arabic Interpreter for the Army. He was completely absorbed in his portrayal of Chinese Gordon and was totally taken by the country of Egypt. I was about 13 at the time it was released and I remember doing a charcoal sketch of Mr. Heston as Gordon and one of Laurence Olivier as the Mahdi and presenting them to him. I do thank Mr. Heston, for when I watch his movies now I remember my brother with fondest of memories. Now, from a horse soldiers daughter that is a good compliment! But this is another thing about these people, they are usually excellent equestrians as it comes natural as it appears to these men or else they are the best actors in the world! I have got one there too, and I am pointing his out because it is a blessing and a curse. Prominent moles were highly regarded by the ancients for they denote an organ that has extra-special strength however, many are from poor working organs as they are the endings of nerve impulses that lead to them. If you have a mole like this it means your kidneys are sound but the mole can enlarge, or even go cancerous, if you are on refined foods and your gall-bladder will also suffer the effects and what was a hallmark turns out to destroy us if we do not care for it. People with these features on refined foods are often restless, suffering from sleeplessness, and with such genetic features they are hit very hard, and what could be a very long life is often short, Mr. Moore, like James Garner, probably has the most perfect nose and their features remind me of Pharaoh Chephren if you will look back to the plate. I had to kind of chuckle for there has not been a fight like that since Marduk took on Enlil in a fight in front of the Great Pyramid as the Sumerian tales seem to relate! It was a little foolish however, for them to portray James Bond as a man of action and yet drinking and very promiscuous for the two vices would have lowered his testosterone levels so and made him terribly afraid of heights and loud noises as well as a lack of quick reaction and thought. Sugar and alcohol are very detrimental to men in jobs that demand derring-do. They should have made Bond celibate for it to be believable, as men in the past have been so in such positions. This Page was ridiculous and very dangerous for it would have men believing if they had thick eyebrows and a hirsute body they were healthy, But all this spells a liver disorder with hormonal problems, which his high voice proved and any man with these features should see a doctor immediately. All in all, I hate to say it, but if these gentlemen were starting out today I do not think they would gain the popularity they have because the andric look in men is fading and good, classic features are not looked upon by the masses who like the doggerel looks. I personally cannot think of any other actor in the last few years who comes close in mystique save one, and it was very wise of George Lucas and Steven Spielberg to use him.

NH Even today, more than twenty years after the program stopped production, it is broadcast in syndication in markets all over the world. All of the references so far have at least a small possibility for error. What you want is an unimpeachable source. I have heard nothing but good things about it. Still, I have to wonder if this is one of these situations where there is no perfectly right answer, simply because of a lack of documentation that makes it "official" for example, a press release from the television studio that produced the show. I assume they all consulted their respective trusted references, and these produced differing results because By the way, it would seem that Total Television covers programming only to late or early I wonder whether there are plans for an updated edition. Would I have done that if I were the writer of Hawaii ? DK That may be true, but I do think this a case where there is a more correct answer: I have to assume they saw it print any number of times from any number of sources during the years the show was on the air. The script is the ultimate resource. There is no possibility that sources specifying DANO are anything but typos. Probably later in the hour, around 1: First off, he was only one writer. VF You are both excused from jury duty. CS RL - I respectfully disagree. If the man who wrote the script used "Danno" in his title, that certainly is the name of the character. Everyone spells it the same way.

Prefer solitude. Don't like telephone calls. Don't like unexpected visitors. Most of the time I am a curmudgeon. Don't like to be disturbed.

If one has truly decided to have a problem then that is the as-isness. Your problem is therefore not alter-ised or not-ised. The beauty of this kind of problem is that it is destroyed the instant you stop creating it. They happen independently of our actions. Continuous As-isness stems from a very high state of being. From Scientology Axiom 11 we go to the first mention of a problem in Axiom 39 and we get the meat of a problem in Axiom 40, any problem to be a problem must contain a lie. The problem you continuously create in an as-isness is not the kind of problem of Axiom 40 because the as-isness does not contain any lies. The kind of problem which Axiom 40 refers to is probably the common usage of the term. This kind of problem persists and may be unwanted. My personal favorites for lies is time and misownership. That is one as-isness to the situation. If that person is an asshole, walking away from them will not solve that. You might be able to stop him by overwhelming him, like breaking a bear over his head. This would clearly be an example of suppressive auditing. Smashing someone over the head creates additional problems while leaving the original problems intact. If this disgruntled individual has pushed your buttons and you want to have a problem with them we have now dropped to a very human condition which is complex, full of altered facts, and a long way from simple as-isness. It will therefore be complex to solve. The motor will not turn-over so it cannot start. Thinking my wife drove it last as the cause is a very long way from as-is ness. The next thing to do is replace battery. The new battery will now provide the juice to turn over the engine and allow it to start and then run. Because the problem was temporarily resolved the solution contained some as-is ness. The true as-isness is to replace the alternator so that the new one can keep the battery charged-up so that it remains capable of turning over the motor allowing it to start. When you finally uncovered the actual truth you as-ised the problem. Your charge may blow when you grasp the true solution. If you remove the nonsense from this, like the use of the word MEST and as-is, you are left with nothing more profound than "if you car has an electrical fault, you troubleshoot it and fix it.

Below is a quick overview to help get you started before you begin your perusal of the individual pages of our site. In a career spanning six decades, James MacArthur developed a body of work which is wonderfully dynamic in both scope and range. Portraying everything from crazed killer to stalwart defender of law and order, frustrated teenager to cynical senior supervisor, he has appeared in numerous films, television programs, and stage productions since his career officially began back in Broadcast live on the Climax! Set in the late 18th century in the burgeoning United States, it told the tale of a young man who had been kidnapped by Indians as a baby and raised as the son of a chief. A respected and accepted member of the tribe, the boy known as True Son is ripped away from the only life he has ever known and forced to return to his biological parents due to a treaty signed by people of whom he has no knowledge and who cannot possibly have any interest in his individual welfare. The corollaries between this story and the custody battles which seem to occur with alarming frequency in our own time are strong and thought provoking. The depth with which MacArthur imbued the role makes his performance both truthful and unforgettable. As sociopathic killer and racketeer Johnny Lubin in The Untouchables episode Death for Sale , MacArthur for the first time portrayed an unsympathetic character. The heart-stopping realism of his performance provided definitive proof of his abilities as a multi-faceted and talented actor. Once again, in both films, MacArthur played young men whose lives are changed by circumstances beyond their control and who must dig deep within themselves to find the inner strength and fortitude to deal with those events. Having by now amassed an impressive list of film and television credits in addition to stage performances on Broadway and other venues, MacArthur then turned to the pivotal role of Ensign Ralston in the tense and nerve-wracking Cold War yarn, The Bedford Incident. His performance as the eager to-please and earnest young officer carried a subtlety and intensity hard to believe of someone not yet thirty years old. The role of William Ashton in the light-hearted romance, The Truth About Spring came next, almost immediately followed by yet another coming-of-age performance as Lt. It was his appearance in this last which would ultimately lead him into the role of Dan Williams in Hawaii Five-O. Even today, more than twenty years after the program stopped production, it is broadcast in syndication in markets all over the world. The Whole Shocking Story. His poignant portrayal of hapless Walt Stomer in the latter provided a fine example that his skills as an actor had not waned in the twenty-five years since that first television appearance. He concentrated on the stage for a while then, performing in productions such as Arsenic and Old Lace , A Bedfull of Foreigners , and Love Letters as well as the occasional live appearance at charity and celebrity sporting events. In , after nearly a decade away from television screens, he took up the role of Frank Del Rio in the Family Channel movie Storm Chasers: Revenge of the Twister. The increasing popularity of the DVD market has seen the re-release of Swiss Family Robinson and Battle of the Bulge , with a new behind-the-scenes documentary narrated by MacArthur and a lengthy on-screen interview covering many aspects of his career. Planned for re-release in July , the version of Anastasia included an on-screen interview with MacArthur discussing his mother, Helen Hayes, and her work in that movie. The play ran from February at the Diamond Head Theatre. In the final years of his life, Jim divided his time between his homes in Southern California and Honolulu. He enjoyed playing tennis and golf on a regular basis, reading voraciously, spending time with family and friends, and travel. He continued to lend his celebrity to charitable causes and made frequent appearances at golf tournaments and other public functions. One of the highlights of his later years was his biannual trip to St. Andrews, Scotland, for a week of golf and camaraderie with a small group of close friends. Although tentative plans had been made for him to appear in a guest-starring and possibly recurring role in the Hawaii Five-0 reboot, those plans never came to fruition. He did, however, "pass the baton" in a heartfelt message of good will and hope for success which was read at the premiere of the new series in Honolulu on 13 September His ashes were spread in an area of the Pacific Ocean adjacent to his Honolulu condominium during a traditional Hawaiian ceremony on 29 January Presented on the following
