"Winter is an etching, spring a watercolor, summer an oil painting and autumn a mosaic of them all." - Stanley Horowitz. Whether you refer to the season between summer and winter as autumn or fall, it's a beautiful time of year.

McMillan was speaking in Sonoma about his annual state of the wine industry report, which SVB released a few weeks ago. What I like about his analyses is that he recognizes that wine sales trends are more than just which variety or region is in vogue. He thinks big picture, which means he looks at both the current economic conditions and long-term demographic trends. My colleagues at Impact Databank have reported a similar trend: Wine sales continue to grow in the U. The overall economy continues to grow steadily, if not dramatically. And McMillan suggests that a generational shift may be playing a role in wine. The Baby Boomers have been powerhouse wine consumers since the s. Is the problem that they prefer spirits or marijuana to wine? No, the data shows that Millennials do like wine. But they have a problem: What about my generation? Most of us started work during the financial boom years of the s. And today, we are increasingly buying more premium wine. Problem is, there are a lot fewer of us than Boomers or Millennials. There are about 50 million Gen Xers, while both the Baby Boomers and the Millennials each have around 75 million members. The report projects that Millennials will take over in All of which means that the average wine consumer will be changing a lot in the next eight years. Wineries will have to work hard and work smart to retain older customers, while also trying to attract new ones. How can they meet the challenge?

Her performance garnered numerous awards, including the Golden Globe Award for New Star of the Year Actress, and established her as a leading actress. Film critic and author Stephen Farber described her performance as having an "electrifying impact" Film critic Roger Ebert called the film "brilliant", and noted, "A great deal of the credit for this achievement must go to Mia Farrow, as Rosemary". While filming, Mitchum told her about True Grit director Henry Hathaway having a reputation for being rude to actresses. Farrow asked producer Hal Wallis to replace Hathaway. Wallis refused; Farrow then quit the role, which was then given to Kim Darby. In 1959, she played the title role in The Haunting of Julia. Farrow appeared in several made-for-television films in the 1960s, most notably portraying the title role in a musical version of Peter Pan I never had any problems with her as an actress, our problems were purely personal. Professionally, she was easy to work with. She had good range, she could do broad comedy as well as very serious parts. As a performer I have only good things to say about her, and I always thought she was neglected in terms of her approbation. She narrated several of the animated Stories to Remember. Allen said that the way she played her character in Broadway Danny Rose was a "very, very brave thing for her to do," as she had to play her role without ever using her eyes. She appeared in several independent features and made-for-television films throughout the late 1960s and early 1970s and wrote an autobiography, What Falls Away, in 1971. The segment for the years to is highlighted in red, with birth rates peaking in and dropping steadily around reaching pre-war depression era levels in The term baby boom refers to a noticeable increase in the birth rate. The post-war population increase was described as a "boom" by various newspaper reporters, including Sylvia F. Porter in a column for the May 4, , edition of the New York Post , based on the increase in the population of the U. Landon Jones , in his book Great Expectations: America and the Baby Boom Generation , defined the span of the baby-boom generation as extending from through , when annual births increased over 4., Authors William Strauss and Neil Howe , well known for their generational theory , define the social generation of Boomers as that cohort born from to , who were too young to have any personal memory of World War II, but old enough to remember the postwar American High. The Leading-Edge Baby Boomers are individuals born between and , those who came of age during the Vietnam War era. This group represents slightly more than half of the generation, or roughly 38,, people of all races. The other half of the generation was born between and These monikers include, but are not limited to, "golden boomers," "generation Jones," "alpha boomers," " hippies ," " yuppies ," " yuppies ," "zoomers," and "cuspers. He defines a Canadian boomer as someone born from to , the years that more than , babies were born. However, he acknowledges that is a demographic definition, and that culturally it may not be as clear-cut. He notes that those born in the years before the actual boom were often the most influential people among boomers; for example, musicians such as The Beatles , Bob Dylan , and The Rolling Stones , as well as writers like Jack Kerouac and Allen Ginsberg , who were either slightly or vastly older than the boomer generation. Those born in the s might feel disconnected from the cultural identifiers of the earlier boomers. Fifty-seven percent of these boomers believed it was important for each generation to earn their own money; fifty four percent believed it was more important to invest in their children while they were growing up. In the United States, that change marked the generation with a strong cultural cleavage, between the proponents of change and the more conservative individuals. The boomers returning to religion were "usually less tied to tradition and less dependable as church members than the loyalists. They are also more liberal, which deepens rifts over issues like abortion and homosexuality. Boomers in Italy were dressing in mod clothes and "buying the world a Coke. Canadian Boomers were organizing support for Pierre Trudeau. It is precisely because of these experiences that many believe those born in the second half of the birth boom belong to another generation, as events that defined their coming of age have little in common with leading or core boomers. Transistor radios were personal devices that allowed teenagers to listen to The Beatles , the Motown Sound , and other new musical directions and artists. Baby Boomer cohort number one born 1955 , the cohort who epitomized the cultural change of the sixties Memorable events: Baby Boomer cohort number two born 1964 Memorable events: According to the American Medical Student Association , the population of individuals over the age of 65 will increase by 73 percent between and , meaning one in five Americans will be a senior citizen. Aging in the American workforce As of [update] , it was reported that, as a generation, boomers had tended to avoid discussions and long-term planning for their demise. Impact on history and culture[edit] Three American Presidents were born in Bill Clinton 42nd , George W. Bush 43rd , and Donald Trump 45th. Conversely, many trended in moderate to conservative directions opposite to the counterculture, especially those making professional careers in the military officer and enlisted , law enforcement, business, blue collar trades, and Republican Party politics. They are also associated with the spending trends and narcissism of the "Me" generation. People often take it for granted that each succeeding generation will be "better off" than the one before it. When Generation X came along just after the boomers, they would be the first generation to enjoy a lesser quality of life than the generation preceding it. Bill Clinton , George W. Bush and Donald Trump.

The Next Great Generation In the United States, birth rates peaked in August [8] [9] and a 20th-century trend toward smaller families in developed countries continued. The Me Me Me Generation. A PricewaterhouseCoopers [27] report used to Ernst and Young uses " This range makes Millennials 5 to 20 years old at the time of the attacks so "old enough to comprehend the historical significance. United States Census Bureau defines the millennial generation as those born from " The Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary describes millennials as those born roughly between the s and s. Between the Greatest Generation and the Baby Boom, author Elwood Carlson defined this cohort as born between ", based on the upswing in births after and finishing with the "political and social challenges" that occurred after the September 11 terrorist acts. S PIRG described millennials as those born between and Gen X , the "Millennial tribe" consisted of individuals born between and According to their hypothesis, they predicted millennials will become more like the "civic-minded" G. Generation with a strong sense of community both local and global. Levine, author of When Hope and Fear Collide: Twenge, the author of the book Generation Me, considers millennials, along with younger members of Generation X, to be part of what she calls "Generation Me". She questions the predictions of Strauss and Howe that this generation will turn out civic-minded. The study examined two types of narcissism: Implications for Faculty and Student Affairs, believes that much of the commentary on the Millennial Generation may be partially correct, but overly general and that many of the traits they describe apply primarily to "white, affluent teenagers who accomplish great things as they grow up in the suburbs, who confront anxiety when applying to super-selective colleges, and who multitask with ease as their helicopter parents hover reassuringly above them. They often said that the "special" trait, in particular, is unrecognizable. Other socio-economic groups often do not display the same attributes commonly attributed to millennials. This generation spans 20 years and its older members use a combination of face-to-face communication and computer mediated communication , while its younger members use mainly electronic and digital technologies for interpersonal communication. As they are not satisfied with remaining for a long period of time at the same job, their career paths become more dynamic and less predictable. In , Myers and Sadaghiani published research in the Journal of Business and Psychology stating heightened participation in the Peace Corps and AmeriCorps as a result of millennials, with volunteering being at all-time highs. It has been reported that this is an issue in corporate environments. Researchers from the University of Missouri and The University of Tennessee conducted a study based on measurement equivalence to determine if such a difference does in fact exist. Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences questions the validity of workplace differences across any generational cohort. According to the researchers, disagreement in which events to include when assigning generational cohorts, as well as varied opinions on which age ranges to include in each generational category are the main drivers behind their skepticism. They look for versatility and flexibility in the workplace, and strive for a strong work-life balance in their jobs [90] and have similar career aspirations to other generations, valuing financial security and a diverse workplace just as much as their older colleagues. They are more likely to support same-sex marriage and the legalization of drugs. Blaming Baby boomers , who largely supported the referendum, one commenter said: We will never know the full extent of the lost opportunities, friendships, marriages and experiences we will be denied. Pew Research noted similar age related trends in the United Kingdom, but not in Germany and Spain, where millennials were less supportive of restricting offensive speech than older generations. In France, Italy and Poland no significant age differences were observed. Critics of such changes have raised concerns regarding their impact on free speech , asserting these changes can promote censorship , while proponents have described these changes as promoting inclusiveness. By analyzing U. S Census data they found there were In , leading commentators began to worry about the long-term social and economic effects of the unemployment.

In Greece, young adults are being "excluded from the labor market" and some "leave their country of origin to look for better options". This generation evolved in circumstances leading to the Greek debt crisis and some participated in the "Greek protests". Societal change has been accelerated by the use of social media, smartphones, mobile computing, and other new technologies. Millennials are the most highly educated and culturally diverse group of all generations, and have been regarded as hard to please when it comes to employers. In an example of a company trying to do just this, Goldman Sachs conducted training programs that used actors to portray millennials who assertively sought more feedback, responsibility, and involvement in decision making. After the performance, employees discussed and debated the generational differences they saw played out. These labels were also a reference to a trend toward members living with their parents for longer periods than previous generations. A study by professors at Brigham Young University found that college students were more likely to define "adult" based on certain personal abilities and characteristics rather than more traditional "rite of passage" events. What young people today are seeing is that approach has led to divorces, to people unhappy with their careers. The majority want to get married; they just want to do it right the first time, the same thing with their careers. A joint study by sociologists at the University of Virginia and Harvard University found that the decline and disappearance of stable full-time jobs with health insurance and pensions for people who lack a college degree has had profound effects on working-class Americans, who now are less likely to marry and have children within marriage than those with college degrees. The data showed similar trends for males. High student debt is described as one reason for continuing to live with parents, but may not be the dominant factor for this shift as the data shows the trend is stronger for those without a college education. The researchers compared surveys of the Wharton graduating class of 2000 and 2004. The results were similar for male students. The research revealed among both genders the proportion of undergraduates who reported they eventually planned to have children had dropped in half over the course of a generation. One-third said that they discussed religion with friends, attended religious services, and read religious material weekly. Twenty-three percent of those studied did not identify themselves as religious practitioners. They conducted a large-sample research study of college students. They found that Next Generation college students, born between 1980 and 1995, were frequently in touch with their parents and they used technology at higher rates than people from other generations. They also found that students spoke with their parents an average of 1. However, some other millennials do not even have a TV, so they watch media over the Internet using smartphones and tablets. In 2008, research was published in the Elon Journal of Undergraduate Research which claimed that students who used social media and decided to quit showed the same withdrawal symptoms of a drug addict who quit their stimulant. The Next Great Generation describes the millennial generation as "civic-minded", rejecting the attitudes of the Baby Boomers and Generation X. Census, which allowed people to select more than one racial group, millennials in abundance have asserted the ideal that all their heritages should be respected, counted, and acknowledged. A poll in the United Kingdom found that Generation Y was more "open-minded than their parents on controversial topics". It was also found that millennials chose most often to define themselves with more negative terms such as self-absorbed, wasteful or greedy. In this report, Pew defined millennials with birth years ranging from 1981 onwards. As of [update], Along with being educated, millennials also tend to upbeat. As stated above in the economic prospects section, about 9 out of 10 millennials feel as though they have enough money or that they will reach their long-term financial goals, even during the tough economic times, and they are more optimistic about the future of the U. Additionally, millennials are also more open to change than older generations. According to the Pew Research Center that did a survey in 2008, millennials are the most likely of any generation to self-identify as liberals and are also more supportive of progressive domestic social agenda than older generations. Finally, millennials are less overtly religious than the older generations. About one in four millennials are unaffiliated with any religion, a considerably higher ratio than that of older generations when they were the ages of millennials.

What generation are you? Society hit its low point in the 80s. Best of both worlds. Least amount of drug abuse, teen pregnancies, petty crimes, violent crimes, highest university acceptance rates, the list goes on. Not to mention that you probably need to have a smartphone in order to be cool. Popular music is always going to be bad, you just have to find your own thing. For them, Gen Y is to Try to figure that one out. The world today is like the dark ages. Nobody really liked popular music in any decade. Especially those who hated the s. Modern or not, still sucks. No, they sucked, too. Saying something sucks and not letting nostalgia bias influence your opinion is fine. What I get pissy about is when people talk about how they loved an era just due to it being old. Some kid said to me on YouTube "omg is the last good year everything onward sucks ashually" and I educated him. Only the memories from the time I am nostalgia for, not the pop culture. This forum is an exception. A lot of my friends openly talk about watching hentai or borderline illegal anime. It was you pre millennials for sure. You corrupted the youth. Borderline illegal hentai anime!?! We were too busy frosting our tips than to get into this weird fetish sh! They could be the same age as you, Jordan. That worries me deeply. I think most of them were born around the mid 80s to mid 90s. Furry births peak at The laws that tried to ban teens from accessing furry were signed into law in I just realized all of this is in the wrong thread LOL It was meant to be in the school year thread. Well the furry fandom got really big by the early 80s meaning that there were a lot of people who were born in the 60ss. There is literally nothing wrong with being born since or liking fictional characters, you oldies are just jealous of our swag. Kids these days prefer drawn lines over the real thing. Makes no sense to me. I got a chart that shows the rise of furry fandom and every year before is null. Mate, only I can provide the charts. Top thread derailers right here. Jordan, remember that time we were in a topic about politics and because you we ended up talking about Rudolf the Red Nosed Reindeer? I was the one who had to show him the real charts. You must be sleeping on the job. Did that actually happen or are you just joking? My favorite was the one when we were discussing generations and I brought up all the suggestive Shrek products from That joke I made about "dipping cups" is probably one of my best. I was busy with.. Good times good times. We are making it a better place. It has more to do with your precious era than my era 8 " to which I respond by sending that great photo of " to infinity". That was the same thread we talked about 2 girls 1 cup and Lemonparty right? Oh snap we talked about all that as well?! Take right now for example. He deleted his account? Now I found that to be some pretty funny stuff. I guess he just grew tired of the place. It can happen when you sort of run out of things to say or when you grow tired of the discussions.
