Rated 5 out of 5 by ffuryy50 from Fun!!! Great game for puzzlers! Starts out easy enough so that you learn the tricks of the game as you go I love these types of puzzles I advise trying out the trial version first to make sure you like this type of brain teaser It is very similar to Professor Fizzwizzle but not quite as difficult. The puzzles start out simple and uncomplicated and progressively get more difficult. New puzzle mechanical elements are added from time to time to make the puzzles more interesting and fun. I kept being pulled along through the game by my desire to finish just one more puzzle. I like the cartoon atmosphere and the variety of the different whimsical artifacts that you have to connect. I was glad that the puzzle screens and the items in the puzzles were big and not difficult to see. I think the keys would have provided extra hints but luckily for me I only used one hint during the game. For the most part the puzzles were interesting and varied enough that I was not bored and they were not so difficult that I was frustrated. A couple of levels at the very end were challenging and took quite a lot of head scratching. It was unfortunate that on the last level of puzzles when you really need to use a hint, they are not available for those levels. If you have 20 or so hints why not be given the help when you ask for it. I disagree with developers that seem to enjoy throwing in really difficult puzzles or levels at the end of a game and then offering no way to get help with them. This is the main reason I gave this game 4 stars instead of 5 stars. I have drying paint to watch. I found this game so bad I actually almost felt like getting it on disc just so I could crush it. The puzzles themselves is not necessarily all that bad, just incredible boring and rather simple well, at least to the point I played. It was broken off with a mini game that played like a PacMan wannabe just horribly much worse I actually like PacMan. What really kills this game for me is the horrible horrible mechanics, the boring interface, annoying music and more than annoying Dale yapping along. Please try before buy, and judge for yourself.
