

Chapter 1 : Dear Neighbor, Please Stop Feeding The Birds Bread - calendrierdelascience.com

My neighbor is comprised of the more than 20 million refugees escaping war and the immigrants escaping oppression, gang violence, corrupt governments, and economic despair. My neighbors are the more , dreamers whose parents brought them to this country in pursuit of better opportunities.

I have a small problem. Which is fine, I feed the birds too. The problem is that I feed the birds bird seed and the neighbors next door feed the birds stale bread products. BIG pieces of stale bread products. That are being dropped in my yard by the birds all the time and the dogs are eating them. I was alerted to this issue about a month ago when I walked outside and a piece of bread fell from the sky. It kind of freaked me out. I mean bread literally fell from the sky as I walked out on my back patio. I called my husband. Is this a sign? So I asked again. I walked outside and a piece of bread fell from the sky and then Leroy ate it. The birds are dropping stale bread products in my yard all the time and the dogs are eating it. They think food falls from the sky. Yesterday I found a stale hamburger bun top. I have a problem with that. Either way, I have to have a talk with my neighbor, but I have to be gentle. It seems like they really like feeding the birds and I bet they think of them whenever they have bread that is just about to go stale and I bet they have a bag filled with stale bread sitting by the back door just waiting to be tossed to the birds. You know, the bitch neighbor that make the senior citizens stop feeding the birds. Maybe my neighbors are blog readers.

Luke, and, as setting forth the power of prayer, is specially characteristic of him. The unexpected visitor asks for "three loaves," one for himself, one for the guest, one as a reserve; and he so far trusts his friend as to hope that he will recognise the claims of his friendship for another. So, the implied lesson is, should the man who prays think that God will care for those for whom he pleads, and will give them also their "daily bread" in both the higher and the lower senses of the word. Pulpit Commentary Verses The wisdom of perseverance in prayer is pressed. The Lord introduces his argument by the short parable of the selfish neighbor. The teaching contained in vers. The disciples, when they heard Jesus pray, asked him to instruct them in the holy art. The Lord then suggested to them a series of short subjects for constant prayer, and further gave them words in which they could embody these subjects, and then proceeded to press upon them that this constant seeking help from God should never be interrupted; no discouragements were ever to prevent their praying. The truth concerning God does not really come out before the words of ver. Well, here is a case in point; but is God like this? The Lord replies shortly to this mute heart-query. The hour midnight has nothing strained in it - it was frequently the practice in the East to travel by night, and so to escape the great heat of the day. Matthew Henry Commentary We must come for what we need, as a man does to his neighbour or friend, who is kind to him. We must come for bread; for that which is needful. If God does not answer our prayers speedily, yet he will in due time, if we continue to pray. Observe what to pray for; we must ask for the Holy Spirit, not only as necessary in order to our praying well, but as all spiritual blessings are included in that one. For by the influences of the Holy Spirit we are brought to know God and ourselves, to repent, believe in, and love Christ, and so are made comfortable in this world, and meet for happiness in the next. All these blessings our heavenly Father is more ready to bestow on every one that asks for them, than an indulgent parent is to give food to a hungry child. And this is the advantage of the prayer of faith, that it quiets and establishes the heart in God.
