Armored vehicles are multifunctional and are used by companies and even individuals to transport precious or valuable items and even large amounts of cash. They are used for transporting items and individuals who are better kept away from the knowledge of the public. These people as well as items are far too important to risk being transported in regular, unarmored cars. Armoured cars are completely safe, bulletproof and can withstand highly extreme temperatures. Here is how the making of an armored vehicle is very different from that of a regular car: The walls, doors, and the ceiling of these cars are made completely from steel, both galvanized and stainless steel. These raw materials give it longevity while making it a protected vehicle for transportation. The steel is such that it is safe from corrosion and rust. It is also hardened to increase the bullet resistance. This can be done in two ways, either by treating it with high heat or through the addition of chromium and nickel at high levels during the process of forging. Although some regular cars may also be made from stainless steel, the extra processes to make them bulletproof are absent from the making of unarmored cars. Also, unlike in regular cars, the windows in an armored car are made up of various layers of automotive glass or glass mixed up with bullet-resistant plastic. In addition to this, the lining of the armored car is done with fiberglass cloth. Difference in Design During the manufacturing of regular cars, the sleek design and safety are two things that have equal importance, and in some cases one might gain precedence over the other. However, when it comes to armored cars the very first thing that is given undivided importance and attention is ballistic resistance of the vehicle. Manufactures of armored cars use hardened steel for its body, the thickness varying with the level of resistance required. As specified above, windows are made of laminated glass which are bullet resistance and can withstand extremely high temperature and force. Some Important Features New technologies have allowed the glass to be made even more powerful, while maintaining its light weight. In addition, there are a variety of little details that are paid attention to during its designing and manufacturing. For instance, the windshields are kept an angle of 45 degrees to help in deflection by lowering the wind resistance, should the need arise. The tires too are such which can run flat or deflated for several miles. There are ram bumpers made of steel which can be used as a roadblock and allow the driver to be able to push through a vehicle. Therefore, in simple words, an armored car is very different in making and design from a regular, unarmored vehicle. It can protect you from mishaps, attacks and assaults, and volatile areas where your life is in danger. Get you armored protection now! Check this new light, fast personnel carrier here. Beginnings[ edit ] The name "Hoito" is Finnish for the word "care". The idea for the restaurant came about in a logging camp outside Nipigon , Ontario. IWW union organizer A. Hill had come to organize the camp into the union and promote the new Finnish-Canadian socialist newspaper Vapaus Freedom. After winning some improvements in the camp, the workers expressed a concern that while being able to find cheap accommodation in the city of Port Arthur now Thunder Bay , they were unable to find reasonably priced, home-cooked meals. The request to open a co-operative restaurant was taken to the board of directors of the Finnish Labour Temple and approved. The IWW was active in the bushcamps in Northwestern Ontario primarily among Finnish-Canadian bushworkers, and effectively operated as a radical alternative to their rivals in the communist-led unions. When IWW organizer J. McDonald visited the Hoito and Finnish Labour Temple in , "it was the activities of the women that he was most impressed by. According to McDonald all the waitresses were members of the IWW, and one of the cooks was a woman who had served a year in a Finnish prison for her activities on behalf of the Reds during the Finnish Revolution of Thin and the size of a large dinner plate, they are eaten with maple syrup, strawberry sauce or a sprinkle of sugar. Other items prepared include viili a sour yogurt , Karelian pasty karjalanpiirakka , Karelian hot pot karjalanpaisti , salmon-potato casserole lohiperunalaatikko , pulla sweet cardamon bread , salted fish suolakala , rice pudding riisipuuro , fish soup kalakeitto , pea soup hernekeitto and Vienna sausage nakki. Another well-known dish is mojakka, a stew of beef, potatoes and turnips that is seasoned with allspice. The word mojakka is not a Finnish word at all, but a term that was coined by the Hoito staff decades ago! Co-operative restaurant[ edit ] Since the restaurant began in , it has operated as a consumer co-operative along Rochdale Principles. Customers can buy yearly membership cards that enable them to vote at the Finnish Labour Temple annual general membership meeting, where the board of directors is chosen for one to two year terms. Customers[ edit ] The Hoito is a popular place with locals in Thunder Bay, with line-ups for breakfast on Saturday and Sunday mornings. Clientele from all walks of life can be found at the Hoito, ranging from students and blue collar workers, to visiting celebrities , politicians and newsmakers. Until the s, the dining room featured long communal tables, and customers were able to buy meal tickets. Today, the restaurant operates in a more conventional way, with individual tables and several small communal tables. Peter Campbell author , The Cult of Spontaneity:
