By doing that you also get a free voucher to the BCNE exam.. I chose to try it without the recommended course. For me this exam was probably more about remembering and looking at improvements to all the things in CCNA back in This post is about my study technique or perhaps more of a record of how I did things. To find places for improvement. Do you have any study tips you would like to share? Go through the manuals “ but read the material in the newer released manuals. Get some sort of idea of what kind of topic the exam is about. Then I read the nutshell guide and marked the things I needed to learn more about basically all. Reading the objectives and trying to answer them with as much detail as I can. Mark the things that I thought would be of interest and what I would need to dig deeper into. Then went through the NetIron and FastIron configuration guides. Not only did I have a peak at all the pages that were listed as relevant, but also read chapters that was not listed. Either because I found them interesting or perhaps because the subject in those chapters are touched upon in Nutshell. To me that just means the more you know about the subject the better. Perhaps first time you read it you glanced over some part. By digging deeper I mean finding the chapters in all the manuals that touch on this subject and reading them, making more notes. Could also be surfing the Internets or Wikipedia for basic overview of how a technology operates. For example license options or feature differences between all the products. To learn things like these also other types of questions I thought would come on the exam I made flashcards in a spreadsheet and printed it on normal A4 so that the question is on one side and the answer is on the back. This was no easy feat. After going through all these documents you should be able to figure out yourself which areas are being focused on “ which you should be making sure that you know.
