

Chapter 1 : The Bunnies' Get Well Soup : Joan Elizabeth Goodman :

The bunnies have the sniffles and Mama bunny wants to make them soup to help them get well. All the animals in the forest end up joining in to get rid of their own sniffles, contributing a little of this and a handful of that until Mama Bunny's soup is a delicious kettle of get-well stuff.

Participants are able to complete surveys about their library. For our part, Youth Services put together four activities that day. And of course, one was storytime. Because it was on a different day than my normal storytime hour, I had a smaller crowd of seven kids and our theme was bunnies. I grew up loving these books and still adore Rosemary Wells. This is a great one all about finding Easter eggs and getting candy and of course, Max being mischievous. I love how Ruby bosses him around, and so do the kids. This was my one and only Easter book, and I asked parents before hand if they minded an Easter book being shared. This is a great book for rhymes. A great read-aloud book! Then, we tried our own hands at locating a bunny. She was hiding under some Easter eggs. The kids got to practice naming colors, and since we were such a small crowd, I let everyone come up and take their own guesses off the board. And I had the houses on stand-by for bunny to hide under if needed. Since the kids were a little wiggly after moving around, we did a quick rhyme to sit them back down: I actually bought this book to possibly make a flannelboard out of it. Well, time got away with me and it was still in my storytime drawer so I brought it down to use as a puppet moreso. And since it was so short, I read it twice! Then, I did a little rhyme with puppets: Hear its funny sound! A frog is what I found! SurLaLune Storytime The kids were spot on with their guesses, but they were still very excited when I pulled out a puppet of the animal from behind my back. Another great guessing book, this time guessing what colors and flowers Bunny sees in her garden. Which brought us to our fingerplay: This book was a fun deviation from a lot of the normal bunny books. This one was about a little bunny who was stuck inside on a rainy day and all the fun he came up with. My kids were very excited to see activities that they do blocks, coloring, etc. He hopped by a tree. And he hopped by me. He stared at the tree. But he made faces at me! Texas State Library That was a hysteric fingerplay. The kids could not stop laughing when we made funny faces. So, it should come as no surprise that I love this newest one by him. All that was left was our craft, which I had purchased from an Oriental Trading craft kit:

Library storytimes and programming for babies, toddlers, school-aged children and tweens! It is definitely the season for colds and sniffles! We also talked about getting hurt and having boo-boos, which tied into the craft with band-aids! One of the little girls had actually fallen on her way into the library and had a skinned-up knee--thank goodness for extra band-aids! During a 30 minute storytime I devote 25 minutes to books, songs, rhymes, fingerplays and flannel boards or interactive activities and the last 5 minutes is for the craft. My typical storytime format is as follows: This is a wonderful rhyming tale of Bear getting sick and all of his animal friends rallying to take care of him. We did the song several times through with the actions and it was a big hit. This was a fun flannel board to do. I gathered up some animals I had made for previous flannel boards and used them for a rhyme. I had the children guess which sound the animal was going to say when it sneezed and then we all said it together very loudly. Bird REALLY gets upset about getting bonked on the head in the story, and the children were very empathetic towards him while I was reading it! In the end, bird gets a kiss, a hug, a band-aid, a cookie and some distractions and finally feels better. I love the big bright illustrations of the animals and it is very fun to wail and moan quite a bit as Bird does in the book: This week I borrowed this idea from Storytime Kate http: I used our large dog puppet named Butterscotch and told the children that Butterscotch had some boo-boos today. I passed out the colorful band-aids I made plenty and let the children choose their favorite color and then said, "Butterscotch has a boo-boo on his ear. The children had to glue the handles to the inside of the bag, glue the red cross symbol to the outside of the bag, and then use glue or tape to affix colorful band-aids, q-tips, a tongue depressor and a cotton ball inside the bag. The children loved this craft Doc McStuffins has really gotten all the preschoolers interested in being a doctor lately! All in all, a great success. Our storytime is done for today, goodbye! Our storytime is done but we had a lot of fun, well our storytime is done for today, goodbye! It has been very well received by the attendees although of course a few get left behind each week. I sure could use one right about now!
