Jones, a lawyer, and his wife Nancy Porter Jones. His mother died when Sam was nine. Sam attended local schools until a physical breakdown terminated his plans for college. He turned to the study of law and was admitted to the Bar in November The young couple moved to Dallas, Texas, thence to Alabama and, by , had returned to Cartersville. Sam abandoned his law practice and worked as a laborer. Almost immediately he began preaching. Increasingly during these years he assisted other preachers in revival work. This gave him greater freedom for evangelistic work and he proved to be an unusually successful fund raiser for the institution. In he severed his connection with the North Georgia Conference to devote all of his time to evangelistic work, although after about he confined his efforts to the South. In addition to preaching and lecturing, Sam Jones published several volumes of sermons and for many years wrote a weekly column for the Atlanta Journal. Sam Jones and his wife had six children: Julia married Walt Holcomb. There are approximately letters and postcards written by Jones to his wife and children, especially Laura Mrs. Sloan and Julia Baxter. In the letters to his wife, of which seven were written during the last months before their marriage in , 62 between and , and six at various other times, he tells of the progress of the revivals and meetings, of his religious sentiments, refers to domestic affairs, and reveals a warm and tender affection. On January 18, he wrote of visiting a Negro College in Memphis. The brief letters to his children, written , are expressive of his feeling and hopes for them. The small pocket diaries and appointment books tell of his activities during , , , and There is a folder of sermon notes and texts of seven of his lectures. Seven scrapbooks and fourteen folders contain clippings of his columns and press notices about his meetings and other activities.
