Mind games men like to play on women and how you can win them. Source Some men really love playing mind games on women. I know I do. If you suspect that your significant other may be playing one on you, all is not lost. Mind games are played for many reasons. If you understand how and why he is pushing you, you will be able to play the player at his own game and come out ahead. This article will list the reasons people play tricks, then explain the most common ones and how to win them. Here are the three main reasons people use deceitful ploys: The first reason why a man might play them is just to test his woman's love, loyalty, emotional capability, understanding, and intelligence. A man may also play them when he really wants to obtain something from his significant other and knows that the only way he can make her consider doing it is by messing with her emotions. These guys are what I call the real players. These real players or masters of the game have recognized how vulnerable emotions can make people, and they are using this shortcoming to their advantage. Yet other guys play games simply because "now, you must wait as I look over my shoulders to make sure no angry girl is close by because of what I am about to say next. Listen, a man may also be playing games simply because he knows it can be fun. Such a man may purposely stir the waters just to watch the fish react. Sometimes putting someone off balance can be satisfying. Unfortunately, some people will not be able to see through these type of games. Mind Games and Their Hacks Is he playing games with your emotions? When deceit enters a relationship, the stakes of every interaction raise drastically. Make sure not to do or say anything you will regret. Source Are you interested in knowing how he could be springing that mind game on you? Based off of my own experience, here are some flags: It normally happens without warning. All of a sudden he starts making unreasonable or impossible demands. He may even start preventing you from doing what you normally would "perhaps even not letting you leave the house. Watch it, please, my dear girl. If he is, he is testing your will power, your resolve, your flexibility, and, most importantly, your strength. If you really want to get into his heart, I believe this is the time to show him how understanding and diplomatic you can be. Did He Suddenly Stop Calling? This can be quite frustrating for the girl. If a girl is really interested, she will normally have a strong emotional reaction to this type of psychological warfare. Most girls will get worked up with fearful thoughts. A girl will start worrying and wondering if he is still interested, if he has seen or is seeing someone else, if he is in serious trouble, if he is ill, etc. Questions, questions, questions, with no answers, because the guy who is supposed to provide the answers is nowhere to be seen. He is not calling, and he is not answering calls. Think of it this way: Maybe he is trying to see how much you needed him or how much you will miss him if he is no longer there. If this is the case, your behavior now can either make things worse or better for you. He wants to see how interested and committed you are, and whether or not you are suspicious. My advice is never to panic or overreact. Keep your head to avoid sending the wrong message. They enjoy steady conversation with their lovers, so once he starts going monosyllabic on her, she will immediately inquire whether there is a problem. Then he will respond in monosyllables or may even begin giving the silent treatment. He is just testing your ability to endure. Has He Become Inexplicably Aggressive? You start noticing that the nice guy you are used to has transformed into a violent stranger. The aggression may not only be directed at you, but also at everybody nearby, creating an atmosphere of fear. I know the situation is not funny. However, the purpose of this terrible ploy is not to hurt you but to test your bravery and tensile strength. He wants to see how much shock you can withstand. Nobody needs a coward as a mate. Even though your partner may not want to admit it, most men need to know that you are that someone who can actually stand up to them and call them to order at the times they need it the most. Doing so successfully will prove you are a strong and fearless woman. This is one way to get a girl, any girl, to boil. Women love to be told how good-looking, pretty, and beautiful they are. So after a woman has laboriously made herself up, she loves to hear her man say he likes the end results. The same goes for her cooking, sense of fashion, and even lovemaking skills. Women love those wordsâ€”those sweet nothings. And what does he do? Almost as if she did not exist! You may even be tempted to start throwing a tantrumâ€”which would be playing into his hands. He is testing you to find your breaking point. This is the worst form of all the mind games he can ever play with a girl. By comparing her with others in a negative light, he is using the most destructive means to point out her shortcomings and faults. We know that our faults are what makes us human, but when a person deliberately forces his significant other to take another look at herself in such a deriding manner, he is sending an entirely different and more terrible message altogether. If this is happening to you, listen up. You might want to retaliate by revealing or telling him things to prove that those people are not as great as he thought they were. But before you do something like that, think again. If you do, it may show that you are ready to throw people who made the "terrible mistake" of confiding in you under the bus. He may also think that such a reaction goes to show how you might talk about him the day the chips are down. Besides, he might be really interested in getting you to change for the better. Yes, sometimes the truth hurts. But sometimes, it is only true friends who can tell you that type of truthâ€”he may want you to know that he is indeed a true friend. Is He Flirting with Other Girls? Mind-gamers know that women are always watching out for those tendencies toward straying that men normally display even unconsciously. And so what does a mind-gamer do? Of course, he sends you those signals! Such a guy will flirt and flirt and flirt just to make sure that you get the message that he may be interested in others more than you. There are three reasons he may be doing this, and I am afraid to say them, as they are not exactly what you are going to want to hear: He may be flirting with others in order to stoke your latent jealousy and make you more interested in him. He could be flirting for fun now just to test the waters and see what your reaction would be like should he on one bright tempting day forget his boundaries and actually take things too far with another girl. He could also be doing it to send you the unspoken message that he is planning on calling it quits, and when he does, he will say that it is because he can no longer cope with your possessiveness. If it is for the first reason, you just have to show him the love. That is what he really wantsâ€”for you to demonstrate that you really want him. If it is for the second reason, you just go ahead and call him to order by letting him know that even though you know he thinks he is having fun now, that there is a limit to that that rubbish you can stomach. I bet you he will be shocked to find out that you know the game, and this will definitely make him man up at once. This will also show that you are intelligent, understanding, caring, responsible, and still interested. Is He Becoming Secretive? Suddenly, you notice your man is becoming more and more secretive. If a man is engaging in this type of psychological warfare, there are many ways he could he could go about it. He might start by refusing to answer some of your questions. He might stop sharing thoughts with you and start preferring to be on his own. He might start appearing distant and forgetful. These actions all are meant to signify a lack of interest in you. The doubts and suspicions he has created in her mind will make her worried, and she will work to find out what is wrong. As with other mind games, purposely creating doubt can allow the mind gamer to find out about how she will react if she ever hears something not-so-great about him. If your man is playing this trick on you, he wants to see for himself whether he can trust you. He wants to know how you react to gossip and hearsay. He is interested to know if you can actually think for yourself and discern the truth by separating the facts from the chaff of any circulating rumors you might hear about him.

Chapter 2 : Emily Dickinson: An Oerview

Before you ask a girl out you should know something of her character and her godliness. Find out what church she is a "member" of and how she is serving. Please, stop asking out the girls that just add "Jesus" to a long list of other interests, because there are godly women out there who value Christ above everything else.

He turned into her, arms finding their way around her. A few minutes later, Cinder emerged from her room, clad in the uniform of conquerors. Sweatpants and a Pumpkin Pete hoodie that her husband had lost the battle for in the opening weeks of their relationship. She made her way to the living room, plopping down in her chair. A rich, dark leather recliner that she would have said had far too much padding, till Jaune had shown her the error of her ways. He was good at that. Her apron clad knight appeared shortly after, his weapon of choice, a martini, in hand. He keeps whining about his ex. Is there anything more annoying? Does he wear all black to complete the image? I make everything look good. I swear you could burn water. Geez, I just wanted to give you an update on the Dust. There was silence from the other end of the line for a moment. About what will happen to you and the imp you cavort around with if you fail to meet the deadline. Now, do we understand each other? Are you done with your call? Can you set the table? Some ships are ridiculous, like Cinder and Jaune. Nah, it could work. Yeah, what would I do? Make an absurd story where Jaune is married to Cinder, but has no idea who or what she is? Chapter 3 : 10 Behaviors Women Show When They're With Their True Love Childish Prose of a Girl on Her Way to Finding Her Woman Paperback - Nov 1 by Linda, Dr. Cavanaugh (Author) Be the first to review this item.

Contact Author There are a lot of things that young adult men do to get young women into bed, into relationships, etc , and plenty of it is legitimate. However, there are just some things that I see other guys doing sometimes that really "gets my goat," so to speak, that makes me roll my eyes and wonder how the human race managed to produce such a huge population when so many of my peers appear even more clueless than I do when it comes to courting women. But, then again, a lot of the things they do work. As one gets older, the flaws in the way immature men operate become more apparent, even if it might have made perfect sense to oneself five years ago. Because of this adjustment in perspective, things I might have not noticed or things I may have not found bothersome in my peers or things I might have even done myself suddenly seem supremely stupid and make me want to shake sense into all the young men I find doing these things. Well, first of all: There are two main types of female reactions to this, the one from an immature, girlish woman, and the one from a more mature, adult woman: An immature or stupid girl, or a girl who otherwise has a lower amount of self-esteem and self-assurance, will giggle and feel impressed and interpret his pushing her down and being condescending as some form of confidence. An adult woman, however That look that says: You think I fall for stuff like that? I know this first hand. You really do get what you project. And, women, who are often irritated by males being condescending: You must understand that a lot of it has to do with YOUR giving them implicit permission to be condescending; if you change that "vibe" you will likely attract a different kind of guy, a guy who is less immature. If all a particular man chooses to attract are the women who are most easily attracted with superficialities, with personality traits that are empty or easily faked, he will get the type of woman who is easily impressed by these things and who will probably never notice the things about him that he actually values. The macrocosm of how women actually are in a wide sense is irrelevant in the face of the microcosm, the relatively tiny community of women a man chooses to surround himself with. He is no better than they are; in fact, he is exactly like them. It is when a man learns to explore women with less of a bias, and without being on an explicit mission to capture them, that the reality of the situation becomes more clear to him over time. If the very concept of a strong or self-assured woman intimidates you and threatens your sense of self, then you have in not so many words revealed your weakness. If you feel inadequate for such a woman--not merely uninterested, but inadequate--there are clearly cracks in your ego that you may want to mend. Immature men hide their weaknesses like a stereotype because they have yet to learn how to phase them out, and they seek women that reassure them, not women who challenge them. Strong, mature men act this way because they know that many good things in life are freely available to them if they only have the courage and genuine confidence to reach out for it, if only they can see past their own feelings of inadequacy. They know that to be able to get what you want, you must first become fit for it, become a match for it. They know that if they want a quality woman, the only way they can really have her and keep her is to be a quality man. They know that this requires challenging themselves to become better people. They know that this requires being with women who might not gladly accept the worst parts of a man they date, and who might not see a man as a hero until he proves himself. Women will notice a man committed to his own growth in this way I hope , and choose him over his weaker peers. If he knows other men would find his woman attractive, he parades her around, feeling a counterfeit ego boost over the fact that he has what they apparently want; he will feel "lucky" to have her, as if it is an undeserved random turn of good fortune. If he knows other men would not be envious of him and would, in fact, find his girl unattractive, he will typically attempt to hide her from other men he knows, to avoid being the subject of even unjustified pity or ridicule. He chose her after all, and, consciously or unconsciously, he chose her to match him. A mature man likes what he likes and owns up to it. He understands that an insult to his lover is like an insult to himself, and he will defend her even against people who are close to him. A mature man picks women by his own standards and not by the standards of others. He does not feel the need to over-publicize what he has, nor does he feel the need to be "discreet" about it. He does not feel either very lucky nor unlucky that a particular woman chose him, because he knows that he must have deserved her if they chose each other. They will over-emphasize the differences between the two sexes in an effort to justify their confusion with women, or in an effort to justify their lack of success with women, or in an effort to justify why all the women they seem to attract are equally immature and vapid. The truth is that there are many more similarities than differences between men and women, and that, regardless of the amount of differences between the sexes, emphasizing them is obviously counter-productive when the goal in romantic interaction is for men and women to relate to each other. Over time hopefully young men learn that better women are best approached by treating the interaction as a normal, if a bit more tender, human interaction, not as a game of push-and-pull between two members of opposing species who are completely clueless about each other. As a man grows older, he becomes more self-assured usually, and will leave such childish things behind.

the woman sitting at the front desk said cheerfully, "you've got an adorable little girl here, miss," she smiled at Leah, wanting to pinch her cheek but the diapered teenager looked away and hid her face in her step-mother's neck.

By Grant Castleberry Originally posted October 24th, I am writing this post for him and myriads of other young men like him—“young, single men that I have conversations with almost daily about life and relationships. I know that God does not call every man to marriage, but for the many that he does, it is a good thing that they find a godly wife. Outside of salvation in Jesus Christ, a godly wife brings more joy and happiness to a man than anything else on earth. She is far more precious than jewels. The heart of her husband trusts in her, and he will have no lack of gain. What man does not want to find that? A woman that he can trust with every ounce of his being. But where does a man begin if he wants to find a woman like that? Where does he start to begin the search for a woman of such value? By no means is this list exhaustive, nor are these necessarily in order of importance, although the first one is. Before a man finds a godly woman, he first finds the living God. He begins to long to glorify Jesus Christ with his life and sees Christ as infinitely valuable and worth all of his time and energy 1 Corinthians 13:4-7 A godly woman will not settle for anything less! She wants a man that could be a spiritual leader for her, a man that she can respect 1 Peter 3:1-2 If you are seeking your validity or worth in a woman, you will not find a godly woman, because you will be looking for qualities that the world esteems rather than the qualities that God esteems. Seek the Lord in prayer and ask him to bring you a godly woman. It is OK to do that. Also, pray for wisdom and discernment. God is more than willing to give that to you as well if you will ask him for it James 1:5-8 Also, start praying for your future wife. Pray for her protection and her own growth in godliness. You will read passages like Proverbs 31 and Titus 2, and you will see and learn about what God considers to be a godly woman. A vision for what type of woman God is leading you to will begin to form in your mind as you listen to the Word of God. And by joining a church, I mean a church where the Word is taught as the inerrant and infallible Word of God, where the Word is taught and preached, where the Gospel of Jesus Christ is cherished, and where people are on mission to bring the Gospel to the world. Also, this should be obvious, but church is where the godly women are! If you want to see a football game, you go to the football stadium. If you want to find a godly girl, go to a church. She wants to join a man on mission that is doing something with his life. She wants to be a part of something special. It is your job to figure out what this is. What are you to do with your life? Where are you to go? How are you going to invest in building the kingdom of God? She wants to marry a hard worker whom she can respect. He will stand before kings; he will not stand before obscure men. Take ownership and pride in your work and work hard. Strive to become the best at what you do. Instead, develop appropriate friendships with Christian women in the context of service in the church. A godly woman wants to first see your godly character on display before she wants to trust you emotionally and romantically in a serious relationship. Before you ask a girl out you should know something of her character and her godliness. You will most likely meet a godly girl at church or serving at another Christian organization or institution. They have seen more, experienced more, and most importantly have walked with God longer than you have. They will be able to invest in your life and impart wisdom to you in ways that your peers cannot. Also, more often than not, older, godly men are married to older, godly women, who know and are mentoring young, godly women. See where I am going with this? Long story short, pursue relationships with older, wiser men. Where do you meet these men? Got back to step number 5, and join a church! Did you find this resource helpful? Click to share on Pocket Opens in new window It is hard to write about my own mother. Whatever I do write, it is my story I am telling, my version of the past. If she were to tell her own story other landscapes would be revealed. But in my landscape or hers, there would be old, smoldering patches of deep-burning anger. Before her marriage, she had trained seriously for years both as a concert pianist and a composer. From the age of 16, she had been a young belle, who could have married at any time, but she also possessed unusual talent, determination, and independence for her time and place. She read "and reads" widely and wrote "as her journals from my childhood and her letters of today reveal" with grace and pungency. Once married, she gave up the possibility of a concert career, though for some years she went on composing, and she is still a skilled and dedicated pianist. My father, brilliant, ambitious, possessed by his own drive, assumed that she would give her life over to the enhancement of his. She was supposed to bear him two children, a boy and a girl. She had to keep her household books to the last penny "I still can see the big blue gray ledgers, inscribed in her clear, strong hand; she marketed by streetcar, and later, when they could afford a car, she drove my father to and from his laboratory or lectures, often awaiting him for hours. She raised two children, and taught us all our lessons, including music. Neither of us was sent to school until the fourth grade. I am sure that she was made to feel responsible for all our imperfections. My father, like the transcendentalist Bronson Alcott, believed that he or rather, his wife could raise children according to his unique moral and intellectual plan, thus proving to the world the values of enlightened, unorthodox child-rearing. Like Abigail Alcott, too, she must have found that while ideas might be unfolded by her husband, their daily, hourly practice was going to be up to her. Am I doing enough? Am I doing too much? Under the institution of motherhood, the mother is the first to blame if theory proves unworkable in practice, or if anything whatsoever goes wrong. But even earlier, my mother had failed at one part of the plan: For years, I felt my mother had chosen my father over me, had sacrificed me to his needs and theories. When my first child was born, I was barely in communication with my parents. I had been fighting my father for my right to an emotional life and a selfhood beyond his needs and theories. We were all at a draw. Emerging from the fear, exhaustion, and alienation of my first childbirth, I could not admit even to myself that I wanted my mother, let alone tell her how much I wanted her. When she visited me in the hospital neither of us could uncoil the obscure lashings of feeling that darkened the room, the tangled thread running backward to where she had labored for three days to give birth to me, and I was not a son. Now, 26 years later, I lay in a contagious hospital with my allergy, my skin covered with a mysterious rash, my lips and eyelids swollen, my body bruised and sutured, and, in a cot beside my bed, slept the perfect, golden, male child I had brought forth. How could I have interpreted her feelings when I could not begin to decipher my own? My body had spoken all too eloquently, but it was, medically, just my body. Part of me longed to offer him for her blessing; part of me wanted to hold him up as a badge of victory in our tragic, unnecessary rivalry as women. But I was only at the beginning. I know now as I could not possibly know then, that among the tangle of feelings between us, in that crucial yet unreal meeting, was her guilt. Soon I would begin to understand the full weight and burden of maternal guilt, that daily, nightly, hourly, Am I doing what is right? She had ceased to be the demure and precocious child or the poetic, seducible adolescent. I can imagine that whatever else my mother felt and I know that part of her was mutely on my side she also was made to feel blame. But I did not know it yet. And it is difficult for me to write of my mother now, because I have known it too well. I struggle to describe what it felt like to be her daughter, but I find myself divided, slipping under her skin; a part of me identifies too much with her. I know deep reservoirs of anger toward her still exist: And I still feel the anger of a daughter, pregnant, wanting my mother desperately and feeling she had gone over to the enemy. And I know there must be deep reservoirs of anger in her; every mother has known overwhelming, unacceptable anger at her children. Article continues after advertisement My mother lives today as an independent woman, which she was always meant to be. She is a much-loved, much-admired grandmother, an explorer in new realms; she lives in the present and future, not the past. But in writing these pages, I am admitting, at least, how important her existence is and has been for me. It was accurate and even radical, that analysis; and yet, like all politics narrowly interpreted, it assumed that consciousness knows everything. The cry of that female child in us need not be shameful or regressive; it is the germ of our desire to create a world in which strong mothers and strong daughters will be a matter of course. We need to understand this double vision or we shall never understand ourselves. Many of us were mothered in ways we cannot yet even perceive; we only know that our mothers were in some incalculable way on our side. When we can confront and unravel this paradox, this contradiction, face to the utmost in ourselves the groping passion of that little girl lost, we can begin to transmute it, and the blind anger and bitterness that have repetitiously erupted among women trying to build a movement together can be alchemized. Before sisterhood, there was the knowledgeâ€”transitory, fragmented, perhaps, but original and crucialâ€”of mother-and-daughterhood.

Chapter 6 : 10 Types of Women Men Like the Most

Dan Bacon Dan Bacon is a dating and relationship expert and the author of The Flow, an eBook that teaches you the easiest way to get laid or get a calendrierdelascience.com has been helping new men succeed with women for more than 14 years.

Men feel attracted to certain types of women and reject others. While there might be exceptions, as in any situation, here are the kinds of women that men usually like: The childish woman There are some men that like childish women. They may appreciate the fact that this type of women is cheerful, playful and represents sunshine in their dull or stressful life. However, try not to exaggerate. Sometimes they need you to act responsible and wise. The mysterious lady I think all men like a bit of mystery in a woman. Thus, you should always keep a bit of mystery in your life, to spice up your relationship. The Virginal Many men feel attracted to the purity of a woman. The action woman Yeah, they like the Lara Croft type, you know it already. Something as simple as a bike ride, for example, is a good way to win his admiration. If you like climbing, if you know how to ride a horse, if you save your cat from trees on a regular basis, or if you are the sportive type, then you might want to show off. Men find action women really sexy. The spoiled type They like women that look spoiled, or like to spoil themselves, but do not exaggerate, because being spoiled has 2 faces: However, do ask for his help from time to time; showing him that you sometimes need him does wonders for his self respect and will make him feel comfortable when in need to ask for your help. Moreover, they will typically look for women that resemble their own mothers. The diva Though they find divas sexy, they will rarely have the courage to approach them. So, if you are the diva type, you might want to give him a sign that you are interested in him. Otherwise, you might find yourself desired by many but alone! The unconventional woman Same as with the childish type, men like women who make them smile. Eccentric women will be noticed by everybody. Not all men think that unconventional is sexy, but some really do. So, o need for you to change, unconventional is sexy and fun!

What you should know to begin with is that girls tend to use a lot of body language to send signs of interest to the opposite sex. In other words, the body language and actions that a girl uses in your presence can actually tell you a lot about how she feels. This is where the ten signs she likes you will come in especially handy. Read on to find out what they are!

IOI 1. You have her full attention whenever you speak. If a girl always listens to you when you have something to say and gives you her full attention whenever you speak, you can be sure that really she likes you. Girls connect on both physical and emotional level after all yes, even for friends with benefits. So, if she keeps asking you questions and listens to your conversations, then you can be sure that she is genuinely interested in you, your life and how you feel. She twiddles with her hair. One very common yet totally unconscious sign that a girl is flirting with you is if she touches her hair whenever you talk. Girls who hang out with guys that they like unintentionally touch their hair, run their fingers through it or twirl their hair strands absentmindedly to look more attractive and more feminine towards the opposite sex. She gives you her phone number. Unless you are in a business meeting, wherein exchanging numbers may be of the utmost importance, you can be sure that a girl likes you if she gives you her phone number and tells her that you can get in touch with her anytime. If things go well after that, she may even start to send out hints that she is willing to go on a date with you. Even if she is dying to go on a date with you, she may still wait for you to bring it up and ask her out. Note that this is also applicable to online dating, although there are some subtle but important differences that you must observe. She gets playful and flirty. Girls do not just get physical when they flirt; they also flirt through words and actions. So, if a girl likes you, she may make more of an effort at making you life by being a bit childish and playful. In fact, a lot of girls do this with hopes of building a special connection with guys that they like. She maintains eye contact. A girl will only maintain strong eye contact with a guy if she really likes him. This is because they associate eye contact with a deeper connection and a feeling of closeness. This happens on a subconscious level, of course. She stays close to you. A girl will only stay close to a guy if she really likes him. This is because girls like being near people that make them feel comfortable and happy. So, if she stays close to you, even when there is a lot of space around you, that just goes to show that she feels safe and secure around you – a sign that she really likes you. She finds excuses to touch you. Girls will always touch you to show you genuine affection and interest. This can be a light touch on the hand or on the arm, or even just a pat in the back. Either way, frequent touches from a girl are sure signs that she is interested in you. If a girl likes you, you will notice that she is constantly around, even if you do not invite her or notice her being there in the beginning. If you go to school or to work together, then you may notice her passing by your desk more often than not for example. She is incredibly nice to you. In the world of traditional dating, guys are expected to reach out to girls and be incredibly nice to them. This involves asking them out on dates and helping them out with certain problems, amongst other things. Now, if a girl starts offering to take you out to lunch or bring you coffee before work, then you can be sure that she likes you in some way. Girls may be used to receiving acts of kindness from guys, but if they go out of their way to do the same for a guy, then that is usually only because they like that guy. She seems nervous around you. Like you, girls get nervous whenever they are around someone that they like. The only difference is that girls are much better at hiding their anxiety, in general. Conversely, though, if she is starting to show a negative kind of anxiety around you, then you will need to take heed because she might find you creepy or might just not like being around you, in general. Despite the common belief, you do NOT need her to display many of these indicators of interest for you to be successful with her. In fact, we have had clients here at PUADatabase. You can do this using the fractionation technique. On the other hand, if you

2. He is too easy to impress. If a woman is attractive, most of the guys that see her will be willing to have sex with her. Many of those will also be willing to have a relationship with her.

When women fall in love, their bodies also produce norepinephrine and phenylethylamine. These increase focus while creating a sense of euphoria. The problem may be trying to figure out if a woman is in love with you, too. Shy behavior A woman who is in love with you will start to be unusually shy. She gives you presents Sure, getting presents on your birthday or holidays is pretty standard. But when a woman is in love with you, you may find that she gives you presents more often. Acting slightly childish If a woman is in love with you, she may begin to exhibit some strange behavior. She wants to be seen as cute in front of the person that she loves, and being cute is often hand-in-hand with being slightly childish. Note also their speaking style, which at first glance would sound warmer just like a small child. Interested in your life A woman who is in love with you will take an interest in your life. She wants to know about your day, about your past, about your hopes and dreams. She is genuinely interested in your life and what you think and feel, and all of your opinions on things. These are behaviors of a woman who really wants to talk to you. Shows interest in what you do Do you have a boring job? She loves to listen to you talk about what you do for a living, or talk about your favorite hobbies and interests. A woman who is in love with you is interested in even the most boring details of your day. One of the first impressions that someone can make is with their physical appearance. Always looks happy When you walk into the room, does her expression change? Does she light up when she sees you? But a woman who is in love with you may find it hard to maintain eye contact. After all, eyes are a window to the soul. A woman who is in love with you will have no problem keeping your wants and needs at the forefront of her mind, and she will be happy to help you with whatever you need. Final thoughts Women show their emotions in different ways than men do, and when they fall in love, they can exhibit a type of behavior that makes it obvious â€” but only if you know what to look for! Chapter 9 : Mind Games Men Like Playing on Women | PairedLife

If he knows other men would find his woman attractive, he parades her around, feeling a counterfeit ego boost over the fact that he has what they apparently want; he will feel "lucky" to have her, as if it is an undeserved random turn of good fortune.
