

Chapter 1 : Classroom Library Organization Made Easy | Classroom Organizer from Booksource

Booksource Classroom Organizer is a free web-based program that helps you organize and inventory your classroom library, find the right leveled literature and assess student development.

And somehow one week of summer vacation has me itching to plan for next school year or at least for the cute pinterest inspired part of starting a new school year. Not so much the actual work part though! Keep reading for some awesome classroom organization ideas! Ready to join me in some vicarious organization enabled by Pinterest? Here are my favorite classroom organization finds shared by some very creative teachers. Click each picture to head on over to their blogs: Sort construction paper into a filing box. I had a hard time keeping enough supplies out for multiple math games at a time without it looking like a small hurricane has blown through my classroom so this looks like a perfect solution. Store base ten blocks in supply caddies. This idea is brilliant! Seriously, you must click the photo below and give yourself some time to take it all in! Then add more labels! So many fun possibilities starting with these fun teacher supply jars. Color code your curriculum files by subject. One of my big summer goals this year is to purge my files and hopefully eliminate one of my file cabinets. If I survive the file downsizing this will be my next project. Sort extra crayons by color. And I love anything that incorporates another rainbow into my classroom! Use plastic dishpans to store classroom library books. I am a girl who loves her plastic containers a little too much so I thought I had seen all of the classroom storage options at this point. I am so happy to be wrong! I love that they are clear and wide to store odd sized books. Click through to see more! Store earbuds in a plastic bead box with numbered sections. This year was my first year to have the kids bring in headphones to use and it was a hot mess! I love using scrapbook paper but I really hate how spendy it is. And I hate it even more when I see kids destroying the scraps or just dumping them once they are finished. This year I had a tub for kids to save the scraps in but having all colors in one tub made it time consuming to dig through when we needed more for a new project. Set up a check out station for your classroom library I love how you could reuse this from one year to the next using class numbers rather than names. It might be a little ambitious for my first graders to manage at the start of the school year but I think by mid-year they will be up for the challenge. This is another photo that leads to an amazingly inspiring classroom tour so be sure to click through to see the rest of this room! I like this idea because it meets somewhere in the middle. Maybe this will be the one to stick! Store emergency sub plans in a well labeled container. This way it would definitely be easy to spot too! I love how roomy these bins are and that they stack to save on counter space. Especially since I have no free counter space at this point! Store ipods in labeled caddies. From Molly at Lucky to Be in First! Separate teaching resource books by topic. I spend way too much time squinting at the teeny tiny titles on the spines of skinny teaching resource books trying to find stuff. This will save me so much time and hopefully eliminate eye strain too! From Clutter-Free Classroom Store puzzles in pencil pouches. I am in favor of anything that means I can get rid of the severely abused cardboard boxes my rainy day puzzles live in! Such a great idea! From Kelly at The Navy Stripe Somehow I think this system will work much better than my current system, especially because my current system is one giant pile of papers with post-its barely hanging on!
