They have not seen each other since they left school, but one day they meet by chance on the street in Tallinn, the capital of Estonia. Are you a student? Where are you studying? Yes, I work in the Tallinn department store. In the vocabulary lists that appear throughout the book, nouns and adjectives are given in the nominative and genitive cases; the partitive form is also given in the glossary at the end of the book. A dash "—" indicates that the form is identical to the nominative. Verbs are given in the infinitive -ma form. Two old friends 13 Language points The present tense of the verb The present tense of the Estonian verb has the following endings: We shall be returning to consonant gradation again later as we meet it in various forms. It conjugates like this: I am a student. Noun cases Estonian has a system of noun cases which largely do the work that prepositions do in English. The nominative case, which represents the subject of the sentence, is the basic form given in the glossaries, and it has no particular characteristic ending: There are fourteen commonly used noun cases in Estonian, and we shall meet them all in the course of the units. The genitive form usually ends in a vowel, and because of its importance in forming other cases, you will find the genitive form given after the nominative form for all nouns listed in the glossaries. In the large number of cases where a noun ends in a consonant, a single vowel is added: Two old friends 15 In cases where the noun ends in a vowel, this will also be the genitive singular form, and so most other case endings will be added directly to this stem: I study at the University of Tartu. When we come to study adjectives, we will see that they too can be declined; in most cases they agree in number and case with the noun they qualify. We say Piret is a young woman. Piret on noor naine. Exercise 1 Pronounce the following words:
