Portsmouth to Concord Our very own Trojan horse Check out the historic marker commemorating the event near Northwood Town Hall. The many offerings outside Timber Art Chainsaw Carvings. The stallion is actually the second wooden horse to stand at that location. That horse was burned down in , 10 years after it was erected, perhaps by art critics or liberal activists. BTW, Ober also built a replica of a concentration camp complete with a tower and barbed wire and a dummy guard. The camp and the cemetery are also long gone. Between antique stores, where you can buy anything from vintage duck decoys to an 18th-century blacksmith bellows, is Piece Time Puzzles. There you can purchase a de-constructed picture as simple or intricate as you like it, or have one custom-made from a photograph. There are also a couple of unique pit stops along the way. Chow down at the Common Man Restaurant , the flagship of the altruistic restaurant chain known to occupy landmark buildings, including this one, a 19th-century brick home built by a local doctor. Just down the street is the Vintage Fret , a new and used guitar shop and a sort of string instrument museum. Litchfield to Merrimack Lobster, farmstands, mini-golf and a petting farm The two-lane blacktop skirts the Merrimack River from Litchfield to Merrimack. Stone markers at both ends of the road memorialize Bancroft, who left the town money when he died in to build a bridge to replace the ferry that ran across the river from Litchfield to Merrimack when it was the main stage coach line from Exeter. The road, otherwise known as Rte. It looks much the same as it did when Henry David Thoreau flowed past in his famous 19th-century trip on the river. Keep an eye out at the northern end of the road for the funky folk art lighthouse fashioned from a standing tree with a real red light on top. Here, kids can practice their swings at the batting cage or run next door to the picturesque mini golf course. But there are no gaping mouth clowns here. Instead, golfers take aim for New England lighthouses and realistic covered bridges. It is a northern outpost of the iconic Essex, Mass. Drive a little farther and visit the free little petting zoo at McQuesten Farm , then head inside for local produce or show up on pick your own tomato or bell pepper. One of the historic barns along the way. Petting zoo at McQuesten Farm. Here are a few other stops and sights to see sprinkled around the state. Dedicated to a neighbor boy who died In World War I, the park is also the home of the Oak Tree, so named because it supposedly was planted in
