After twenty-two years at the helm, Robyn and Brian Bargh, the founders of HUIA, decided at the end of that it was time to do other things. Stalwarts of New Zealand publishing, they had a vision of telling stories that reflect the diversity of life in Aotearoa, and this has been a guiding light for HUIA. It has been an honour and a privilege working with Robyn and Brian, and we wish them well in their retirement. As you read the pages of our $15 catalogue, you will discover that, over the years, HUIA has built up a fascinating body of literature. We expect this book will challenge and engage us in a critical debate about indigenous religious culture. If you enjoy reading our books on a digital device, we have many titles available as e-books. We love producing books that delight, inspire, inform and challenge people. We hope you enjoy your HUIA reading experience as much as we have enjoyed bringing the books to you. She has previously published a family history of the pioneering Harsant family of Hahei titled Island View. Closely studying the cycles in nature, the people built up knowledge of the changes in sea conditions and best planting and harvesting times for each day of the month and organised activities based on these phases. This collection looks at the state of the language since the Act, how the language is faring in education, media, texts and communities and what the future aspirations for the language are. It identifies four leadership styles: But when Stone Cold arrives, the three come to different conclusions about how to deal with being trapped in a small town at the bottom of the heap. The Very Hungry Caterpillar has been translated into more than 50 languages. This will be a favourite with children as they take a walk with the clever little mouse who tricks all the animals in the forest. Julia Donaldson writes picture books, educational books, novels, plays, songs and musicals and is also a performer. She has won many awards, including several for The Gruffalo. Axel Scheffler is a German-born illustrator who has illustrated books for children produced in England, Germany and The Netherlands. The digger working in the garden next door gets stuck in the mud when it rains and needs some help from a bigger digger. The books are packaged as two separate sets, each containing ten titles. The address challenges some basic aspects and assumptions in modern Samoan indigenous religious culture. In Search of Fragrance: Indigenous Women in the Pacific. December In this lively picture book for children aged 3-7, Dad tells his daughter imaginative stories about the keys on his key ring and what they unlock $ from a zippenburger that takes him to work, to a rocket to collect space noodles, and a paddock with a woolly mammoth that eats only yellow food. She has completed several film courses, and her screenplay Wasabi Peas was a semi-finalist in the L. Comedy Shorts Film Festival Not by Chance Jeff Evans Release date: The Maori War Canoe. He works as a freelance writer and photographer and is based in Auckland. Te Wharenui i Hoki Mai Mataatua: The book describes the construction of Mataatua $, its travels, attempts made to have it returned and its rebuild and opening in The text weaves information about each topic with cultural knowledge and traditional stories, and each book is richly illustrated with photographs of artworks, places, ceremonies or natural features. Tales and Treasures of Taranaki Andrew Moffat Showcasing items from the Puke Ariki collections, this book casts new light on stories and people of the Taranaki region. Wild about Meat Darran Meates with Aaron Smale This illustrated book teaches you how to process pigs and deer, including tips on knives, skinning and butchery. Chapter 2 : Tommy Kapai (Author of Cuzzies Find the Rainbow's End)

Huia Pub. is a publisher of children's books. Some of the books published by Huia Pub. include Dream Fish Floating, Taming the Taniwha, Oh, Hogwash, Sweet Pea!, and Cuzzies Meet the Motuhoa Shark.

Maui had ventured out with his brothers on a fishing trip with a special fishhook he had secretly made from the jaw bone of his grandmother. If you look at the North Island you can see its resemblance to a fish, in which Wellington is the head, Lake Taupo the eye and Auckland the tail. Maui recognised the significance of what he had caught and knew he should make peace with the god of the sea, Tangaroa. However while making peace, his brothers grew impatient and started carving up the fish for themselves. These are now the valleys, mountains and rugged coastline of the North Island. Maori oral tradition tells of an ancestral home of Hawaiki, which today is believed to be in the area of the Cook Islands. Over time these Polynesian settlers formed a distinct culture as they adjusted to the new land. With no native mammals to hunt, the first Maori settlers were dependant on fishing and catching native birds for protein. In the early days Maori feasted on the moa the bird, not the delicious craft beer we now drink today! The Moa was one of the biggest birds known to man growing up to 3m tall and weighing around kg was eventually hunted to extinction. As food sources became harder to find, the Maori became increasingly dependent on fishing and farming taro, uwhi yams and kumara sweet potato brought over from Polynesia. Maori society was divided into whanau family and hapu subtribe groups which, over time, merged into large iwi tribes for political organisation. A complex system of law was developed based on reciprocity and barter. Trade for resources between iwi and hapu became common, as did intertribal warfare which led to the development of fortified pa, or defensive settlements. Tasman anchored off the South Island in an area now known as Golden Bay and sent a scouting party towards shore. However, the native Maori were wary of these pale skinned visitors and may have mistaken them for patupaiarehe, fair-skinned fairy folk or ghosts, who were deemed as bad omens. The Maori launched a bloody attack by ramming one of their waka into the Dutch scouting boat, killing four of its sailors. This was still enough for a national park named in his honour. Captian James Cook sailed from England on the Endeavour as part of a naval research expedition. Like Tasman before him, his first meeting with the Maori people became hostile. Cook went on to spend six months successfully circumnavigating the North and South Island. He was an excellent navigator and charted the coastline with amazing accuracy and detail considering the tools he had available. Cook is also attributed with conquering scurvy, a fatal disease that had long plagued seafaring voyages. He later returned to New Zealand on two other expeditions while further exploring the pacific. You can still visit one of the original pubs, the Duke of Marlborough, in Russell today, although it has calmed down considerably since the early days. The next settlers to follow were Christian missionaries, who also played a prominent role in colonisation. The missionaries were more successful in earning the respect of Maori leaders due to their dress and teachings. However, religion was not the only thing that Europeans brought to this country. They also introduced pigs some are still called Captain Cookers , new diseases and guns. As the Maori previously lacked long-range weapons, muskets were seen by Maori as a method of asserting tribal dominance. Maori still controlled the resources and power in New Zealand with settlers numbering just The British government lacked a system to assert control over its own increasingly lawless settlers and wished to gain control over Maori land. In , Captain William Hobson convened a meeting of local chiefs in Waitangi on the 5th February, The next day, the Treaty of Waitangi was signed, guaranteeing Maori land rights in exchange for British sovereignty. The 6th of February is now recognised by a national public holiday, aptly called Waitangi Day. British immigration to New Zealand soon boomed with the promises of cheap land and discovery of gold. By , settlers numbered , and outnumbered the Maori. The influx of British immigrants and attempts to impose British law over Maori led to ongoing disputes. Attempts to arrest Hone Heke sparked conflict, which grew during the s as more and more land was dubiously sold to the settlers. Around one million hectares of land was claimed from Maori by the Crown and sold off to European settlers.

Sealing, whaling and the felling of great kauri trees gave way to farming the land, mainly because all the other resources had been totally plundered. Eventually, the sheep was introduced and began to dominate the economy. At its peak in the s, there were 70 million sheep versus 3 million people. More recently, sheep farming has waned under the growth of diary and forestry. However, over the course of the 20th Century, NZ has developed a strong sense of national identity priding itself on its hard work ethic and ingenuity. It ends on the first Sunday of the following April, when clocks go back an hour. New Zealand Met Service - www.aoraki.govt.nz
