Has this poem touched you? In a conversation with her, she was saying how sad it was that she had only received one card or written form of a message. Everyone had sent text messages. Text messages are not keepsakes. Having grown up with only brothers, this daughter was everything to this father. I was looking for words of comfort for my daughter and came across this poem. It brought tears to my eyes because it puts into words exactly the bond they had. He had experienced a very long illness, and she was there right through to the end. My daughter is 5 now, her mum left the UK with her and ran off to Pakistan without telling me. Almost days later, I have no idea what she sounds like, what she smells like At the age I am today 15 , I still miss My Dad very much. He passed away in when I was only 7. Cancer is what took Him away from me. I Loved Him with all my heart and soul. I enjoyed this poem. It reminded me of all the great times we had together by Kami, Bellingham WA 5 years ago This story touches my heart especially with fathers day coming around the corner. To tell you the truth, I hate fathers day. I went through a time he was not in my life. In the summer right before I started my senior year of High school, my dad went to jail. I was away in Colorado the week it happened and did not know until I came home. I had to go that whole year, plus some, without my dad. All those senior memories that I was suppose to have with both my parent were gone because my dad was in jail and my mom was trying to take care of all the "stuff" that went along with putting him there. I did not have him there to convince me to go to prom when I decided not to. Now 6 years later, my dad is trying to make up for everything that happened, he knows that nothing will ever erase it. I think about them often and how much I love and miss them. When Alejandra was born she looked at me smiled and managed to get her little arm out of the blanket she was wrapped in just to hold onto my finger, daddy cried like a baby. My daughters mean the world to me and it pleases me to know there are other good Dads out there that can make an imprint on their daughters. This poem really touches my heart because I lost my father 3 years ago. He was a very good man. I can not forget when my father died. He deid on the 24th November This day was very bad for me because I was not home when my father died. I always remember my childhood when my father was with me. He was very caring for me. I miss him so much. I lost my Father a month ago.. I miss him so much.. I hope and pray that we can have many more years together. This poem really touches my heart. I was just searching for ideas. I found this poem I think its true. My father died also 13 years ago. I missed him so much. My dad was my best friend and I miss him oh soo much by Teresa, Nevada 7 years ago This poem really touches my heart. As me and my Dad have been kept apart most my life of, which I and he feels is an injustice. Though together just a short time when I was little, I fell as though nothing can erase this bond not time nor space. I finally found him not long ago after being separated from him for eons. What a joyous reunion that was. I miss him so much he was all ways there for me. Share Your Story Here. All stories are moderated before being published. Chapter 2 : 8 Things A Girl Needs From Her Father - Beliefnet

The gift my dad helped give me was a lack of shame and sense of entitlement to sex -- good sex and, sure, "fucking awesome" sex -- and that's something every daughter deserves.

And, to all you Dads out there -- be sure you pay close attention and heed these wise words. About Michael Mitchell is an almost thirty-something dad who blogs daily tips and life lessons for dads of daughters at lifetoheryears. He spends his days practicing the arts of fatherhood and husbandry, while attempting to be a man of God and a professional raiser of philanthropic funds. Treat her mother with respect, honor, and a big heaping spoonful of public displays of affection. Be genuinely interested in the things that interest her. She needs her dad to be involved in her life at every stage. It might as well be you. Rise to the occasion. Red cape and blue tights optional. Savor every moment you have together. Life happens pretty fast. You better cherish it while you can. Buy her a glove and teach her to throw a baseball. Make her proud to throw like a girl -- a girl with a wicked slider. She will fight with her mother. Buy her those pearls. Of course you look silly playing peek-a-boo. You should play anyway. Enjoy the wonder of bath time. There will come a day when she asks for a puppy. She will still probably suck you dry as a teenager -- and on her wedding day. Make pancakes in the shape of her age for breakfast on her birthday. In a pinch, donuts with pink sprinkles and a candle will suffice. Buy her a pair of Chucks as soon as she starts walking. Danielle Rocke Toews She will probably squirm more than the worm on your hook. Learn to say no. Say it over and over again. Teach her to change a flat. A tire without air need not be a major panic inducing event in her life. Immerse her in the great outdoors. Watch her eyes fill with wonder the first time she sees the beauty of wide open spaces. Leave the iPod at home. Let her hold the wheel. She will always remember when daddy let her drive. Make sure she knows that. When she learns to give kisses, she will want to plant them all over your face. Knowing how to eat sunflower seeds correctly will not help her get into a good college. Letting her ride on your shoulders is pure magic. It is in her nature to make music. She will be drawn to the water like a duck to a puddle. She will eagerly await your return home from work in the evenings. If her mom enrolls her in swim lessons, make sure you get in the pool too. Never miss her birthday. Teach her to roller skate. Watch her confidence soar. Let her roll around in the grass. Take her swimsuit shopping. Somewhere between the time she turns three and her sixth birthday, the odds are good that she will ask you to marry her. Let her down gently. This is a good thing. Introduce her to the swings at your local park. Keep that in mind. Holding her upside down by the legs while she giggles and screams uncontrollably is great for your biceps. She has no concept of muscle fatigue. She might ask you to buy her a pony on her birthday. Unless you live on a farm, do not buy her a pony on her birthday. Take it easy on the presents for her birthday and Christmas. Instead, give her the gift of experiences you can share together. Let her know she can always come home. Remember, just like a butterfly, she too will spread her wings and fly some day. Enjoy her caterpillar years. Write her a handwritten letter every year on her birthday. Give them to her when she goes off to college, becomes a mother herself, or when you think she needs them most. Learn to trust her. Gradually give her more freedom as she gets older. She will rise to the expectations you set for her. When in doubt, trust your heart. When your teenage daughter is upset, learning when to engage and when to back off will add years to YOUR life. If you succeed in doing this, tell me how. Ice cream covers over a multitude of sins. Know her favorite flavor. This day is coming soon. The sooner you accept this fact, the easier it will be. As much as it pains me, I have had to disable the comment feature.

Miranda tells her daughter that Roland is her dad and that he is looking forward to going on the field trip with both his daughters. Sofia decides to go after all and leaves to help her mother pack snacks for the trip. Amber, Sofia, and Roland canoeing. Hildegard demands her father ensure she see some Enchanted Animals right away. King Henrik asks Miss Elodie where they can find some Enchanted Animals right away and Miss Elodie points out one that looks like a stone. Hildegard thinks it is a rock until Sofia reveals that it is really a Disguise-O-Fly. Hildegard tells her father she wants one. Henrik tries to get it for her but Miss Elodie stops him and tells him that they have to leave the animals alone. Everyone gets to the canoes and each Royal Family separates into each one. Amber tells Sofia she and their father have worked out a paddling system. Shocked, Sofia asks her big sister since when does she paddle and Amber tells her little sister that Dads and Daughters Day is the day she forces herself to do outdoor stuff in order to ensure their father has a good time. Sofia feels bad that she made them crash. Roland assures her that she just needs practice but Sofia still feels bad and decides to not paddle at all. As they go down the river, the group sees some Pelicans, birds that are half-pelican and half-elephant, and Water Zebras, sea mammals that are half-zebra and half-fish, that Hildegard wants to pet. Henrik tries to take Hildegard over to pet them but Miss Elodie stops him again and reminds him that they are not allowed to touch the animals. As soon as the group gets ashore, Roland and Amber take Sofia over to the Imprint Tree, a magic tree that, if you put your hand on it, makes a magical imprint that lasts forever, and shows Sofia their marks. Sofia wants to put her mark with her family but the Enchancians get called over for one of the Dads and Daughters Day games. Everyone takes part in the Rumbling Bumbleweed Race, a race where the Royal Families race to a tree while jumping over bumbleweeds that the Racket-Tailed Raccoons bat back and forth. The Enchancia team loses because Sofia could not jump over the bumbleweeds at the same time as her father and sister. Sofia feels bad that she made her family lose. Roland tells her it is just a silly game but she still feels bad. On the way to the next Dads and Daughters Day activity, Amber notices that Sofia feels bad and Sofia tells her that she feels that she is getting in the way. Amber tells her she is only doing badly because she has never been on the picnic before and she and Roland have been on the trip three times and decides to arrange things so her sister and Roland can spend some time just with each other. They then head to the next activity: The Father Daughter Sing-Along. Amber tells her father her voice is horse and for him and Sofia to sing without her. Everyone starts singing the Dads and Daughters Song. As the Sing-Along resumes, Hildegard sees a Pelican egg and tells her father she wants it. Henrik goes to get it for her. Miss Elodie tries to stop him again, warning him that he will make the Pelicans angry but this time Henrik ignores her and takes the egg. As Miss Elodie warned, the Pelicans get angry and attack the group. Father and daughter hug. Meanwhile, Roland catches up to Sofia and asks why she ran off. Sofia tells her father that she should not have come to the picnic because she has not done anything right with him all day like the other Princesses with their fathers. Roland tries to assure her that it is just because she has never been to the picnic before but Sofia tells him that she believes it is because she is just his stepdaughter and will never be his real daughter. Roland tries to assure Sofia that is not true when the rest of the group runs by with Pelicans in pursuit. Miss Elodie tells King Henrik to return the Pelicant egg but he trips and it falls into the gully. Henrik tries to tell the Pelicans the egg is in the gully but the angry birds do not listen. Amber furiously tells Hildegard that it is her fault for demanding the egg in the first place. Sofia tries to go get the egg back but Roland stops her telling her the Pelicans will just attack her too. Using his watch, Roland distracts the Pelicans with sunlight. Sofia takes the watch to keep them distracted while her father gets the egg. The ruse works until one of the Pelicans see through it in a way that makes Sofia drop the watch. Sofia tells the Pelicans they are trying to get the egg. When Roland appears, Sofia falls into his arms and they slide down the gully. Seeing her surprise, Roland tells her that him not being her dad when she was born does not change the fact that she is as much his real daughter as Amber is. Hearing this finally makes Sofia feel better. Working together, Roland and Sofia get the egg out of the gully and return it to the Pelicans. On the way out, the group watches the egg hatch. The group runs into Bubbling Butterflies. Hildegard tells her father she wants one but Henrik, who has learned his lesson, tells her something he should have said a long time ago: Roland and his daughters leave with a sing along.
