

Chapter 1 : Daily Review and Daily Skills Practice - Daily Warmups

Description. Now it's easy to add a little basic skills practice to every school day. Each reproducible practice page provides math and language arts activities.

Turn daily language practice into a game, build test scores too. We teach and test, and then move on to the next skill. We assume that students retain skills once they have mastered them for the test. But the key to true mastery lies in frequent reinforcement of skills. One way to ensure frequent reinforcement of basic language skills is to set aside 10 minutes each day to practice those skills. In this daily activity, students read a timely passage and find ten errors of capitalization, punctuation, or grammar in that passage. Every-Day Edits make a nice bell-ringer activity for students to do on their own. But you might also use it as a whole-class activity each day as students return from morning recess or after lunch. The activity offers an excellent way to help settle down and focus students. And as a bonus -- the timely passages, arranged by month, provide interesting information that builds cultural literacy. Here is one possible procedure that you might use that turns the activity into a game that students will enjoy and from which they will learn a great deal. Immediately, they settle into finding the ten errors of capitalization, punctuation, or grammar included in that passage. Divide the class into two teams or more. The teams you establish in this way will be "permanent teams" for at least a month. Start with one team and ask a student on that team to identify an error in the passage. Students might even find additional errors in a daily passage. Give credit if they offer an idea that would improve the passage. Keep score over the course of a month and award a special treat an ice pop, a homework-free-night coupon, or something else that students will value to members of the team that has the highest score at the end of the month. You might change the makeup of teams for the following month. Feel free to adapt this activity in any way you see fit. For example, one day a week you might make the Every-Day Edit activity an individual not team activity. On that day students will do the activity on their own. You might award the teams a point for each student who achieves a score of 9 or 10. Doing this once a week will enable you to measure individual growth and identify students who might need additional help. Assessment As a result of this reinforcement of language skills you should see improved student performance over time; the use of this activity should result in improved achievement test scores too.
