

Chapter 1 : David Goes to School by David Shannon

I have also created a "David Learns the School Rules" poster that is displayed with the kids David's pictures. Here is a picture of what the poster in my room looks like.

Gwennie told us about the kite in her class. Some kids have moved up to the "level I" part of the kite. Anyway, I asked if she had any books she could read to me. Any "level H" or "level I" books. She said no, but she did have THIS book that she wanted to read to me - and then write a review of it afterwards. I told her we could. Maybe two, or three, or four? Two or three or four? So, why did you want to read this book? And where did you get it? She read it herself. She must be learning something in school I got it from the library. What makes it a good book? Well, what makes it a good book is, sometimes I really like read books about kids who are naughty. Why do you think that is? Well, not naughty like David, but sometimes I am. Well, only if I had a dentist appointment. Well, maybe one time, but not really. I try to always pay attention. I never did that before. Do you want to see that happen sometime? But sometimes in a book. Like a fiction book. So, let me ask another question. It sounds like you try to be good, right? So, how would you respond if someone like David was in your class? What do you mean? Do you think you would laugh at him? I liked it a lot. How many stars should we give it? Sound like a plan?

Reading the Book Read-Aloud Read the book aloud with fluency and expression. If possible, project the book on a whiteboard or screen. Ask students where the text is located in the book. Help them understand that it is written on pieces of paper like a first-grader would write. Point to the text as you read it aloud. Shared Reading Reread the book and ask students to read their copies at the same time. Pause at each page so students have time to study the illustrations. Stop every few pages and have students predict what might happen next to David at school. If students are able, encourage them to read the text aloud with you. Critical Thinking Ask students to think about this question as they read and be ready to answer it when they have finished the book. Write the question on chart paper or have students write it in their reading journals. Do you think David will follow the rules on the next day of school? Why or why not? Comprehension Focus Integrate Illustrations and Story Details The text and the illustrations in David Goes to School are complementary and together create the humor and plot of the story. Help students understand how to read an illustration for its meaning and how to integrate it with the text. Project pages 28-30 on a whiteboard or screen and model for students how to connect the story detail with the illustrations. I see David peeking his head around the door, which must have been closed when class began. Why do you think David is in trouble? How do you think he is affecting the rest of the class? Continue to discuss the relationship between the illustrations and the text with students. After You Read Lead students in a discussion of these focus story elements. School Rules Why does the teacher want David to follow the school rules? Do you think the other students in the class want him to follow the rules? The other students want David to respect them. Integrate Illustrations and Story Details Look at the last two-page illustration in the book on pages 28-29. What is the teacher giving to David? What is she saying? Does this surprise you? Do you think she should have been meaner to David? The teacher gives David a star and tells him that he did a good job. It was surprising, but I think it makes David want to follow the rules when he comes back to school. Verb Endings and Contractions The word goes is in the title of the book. What is the root or base word in goes? What does goes mean? The root or base word is go. Goes means the same as is going. Questions to Share Encourage students to share their responses with a partner or small group. Text-to-Self What school rule do you find most difficult to follow? Text-to-World How is kindergarten different from preschool? How is first grade different from kindergarten? Text-to-Text What is another book that you have read about school? What other problems did a character have at school in the book? Encourage students to support their answers with details and evidence from the text. Tell them there is more than one right answer. Ask students to fill in words for two of the characters in the illustration and write what David is thinking in the thought bubble. Before reading, have students predict what sort of trouble David might get into at home. After reading, ask them to compare the stories and illustrations of the two books. As an adult, he used those drawings to create his books about David. Challenge students to see if they can draw their own version of David. Language Arts Oral Language Play Assign students parts in this mini-play about old friends and new friends at school. The play encourages students to recite a short part of the play aloud and provides social interaction and fluency practice. One day, David walked into our classroom.

David Goes to School/Learns School Rules Activity - good first week of school activity. Could do their name in place of David and write at the bottom "We read. David Learns the School Rules Craftivity and Writing, templates to print out and have students create their own "David".

Last week was our first week of school and it kicked my behind. I was organized and prepared as I could be, but still So for those of you that begin this week, best wishes on a great first week back. I just had to link up with my first day of school lesson plans. The desks and chairs in my classroom are not all the same size so I begin every year by taking the first few minutes to make sure that all of my kiddos are comfortable in their work area. We have a "Back to School Night" rather than an open house on the eve of the first day of school. Students bring in their school supplies as well. It seems to greatly help the students with that first day of school anxiety. I feel this is a great icebreaker on that first day back. I always do this activity before I ever go over rules and etc. I filled the box with 10 cards that have a question that students must figure out about myself and 3 clues to help them answer this question. I am always a little hesitant to go right into my classroom rules and expectations. I use this story to then go into my classroom rules and procedures. Click HERE to find out more. I give my 3rd graders a tour of their new school building. I show them where their art, music, and cafeteria are at. My students love the repetitiveness of this story, and it has them laughing out loud. By now, my students are having a hard time following along and paying attention. So, I include a fun activity that gives them a chance to be out of their seats and interacting with the other students in the classroom. I found this activity from Super Teacher Worksheets. Those are my first day of school lesson plans. I never include times on that first day because everything seems to take so much longer than what I expect. I also seem to plan too much on this day as well. Thanks so much for stopping by!
