

Chapter 1 : French Polynesia Sailing Vacation

He spoke of the difference between the journey and the destination and how lasting success was found at the latter. Times, Sunday Times () There is a long road ahead but no need to be pessimistic about the final destination.

While Tunisia, Morocco and Egypt were the most popular holiday spots for French travelers just a few years ago, now they prefer the Canary Islands and Greece. A decade ago, Tunisia was the most favorite destination for French travelers. After the attack in the Bardo museum in , followed by the attack on the beach in Sousse, it fell to the ninth place, before leaving the top 10 completely in . The development of French tourism in Egypt was similar. The Egyptian revolution, which started in the winter on the Tahrir Square in Cairo, the resignation of the Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, the departure of his successor, Mohamed Morsi, in , and a number of terrorist attacks resulted in a dramatic decline of tourism numbers. Between and , Egypt was the third most popular destination for French travelers. However, in , the country was no more on the top 10 list. Morocco was the second most popular destination ten years ago. Despite the Marrakech bombing in at a popular tourist spot, which killed 17 people, the local travel industry was not harmed significantly. Today, the country is the sixth most popular destination for French travelers. Turkey was another country that lost not only the French tourists. The protests in spring , severely repressed by the police, and the attempted state coup in the summer of harmed the reputation of the country. Turkey is also associated with the refugee crisis as thousands of people flee Syria to Turkey. While Tunisia, Egypt, and Turkey were deserted by French travelers, tour operators had to find alternative holiday destinations. Spain, Greece, Italy, Portugal, and Croatia. The Canary Islands are the most popular. Because of the lack of accommodation, continental Italy could not benefit so much from the redistribution of tourists but Sicily and Sardinia reported growing demand. Continental Greece confirmed that tourism numbers are finally going up after the financial debacle of the country. Greek islands are the second most popular destination for French travelers after the Canary Islands, despite the refugee crisis. Portugal also benefits from the growing amounts of visitors from France – currently it is on the eighth position of popularity. But again, the possibilities of their hospitality industry and tourism services are not infinite.
