Jon Kaneko-James is a London-based writer, with a particular interest in the history of magic and the medieval church. The Welsh Doctor Faustus? Pope Sylvester II is one of them: As his death approached he became more and more concerned with his fate, finally asking the Devil if there was a way to avoid his oncoming doom. Tragically, no sooner had the pontiff started his mass than the Devil burst triumphantly into the church, strutting up the isle with a retinue of capering demons in tow. The Devil strips him of both his life and his dignity, mutilating him in full view of the congregation by tearing out his eyes and tongue, giving them to the demons for sport. The name of the church? San Crosse in Gerusalem. Perhaps Sylvester is a bit obscure? More of us know of Doctor Faustus, made famous on British shores by the playwright Christopher Marlowe. Faustus, whose adventures were first codified by the work of German publisher Johannes Spies in the late s, is a genius in many ways: After defending the weak, revolutionising science and curing the plague he decided that he needed to a step further and gain magical powers, making a pact with the Devil. His arsenal of tricks includes disguising himself as a Jesuit friar, producing magical music and strange mist. His main interest in the whole plot which is a fairly typical play about couples wanting to marry for love instead of money is to harmlessly agitate the lovers while amusing himself by battling rival magician John a Cumber who seems to be almost identical to Jack, except from Scotland. Even in this play, however, he seems to have real power. When the two rustics Hugh and Turnop are talking about him, they say: Nay, God blesse me from him. Definitely a work of devilry. And, like Faustus, he has a demonic assistant: Shrimp, who seems much more loyal to Jack than Mephistophelse. As to a historical Jack O Kent? Ifor Williams, of the University of Wales Bangor, collected a compendium of the main suspects in John Kent Caerleon, an astronomer and author of a book on Witchcraft who died in the 13th Century. Added to the mix was Dr. As dawn approaches the Devil begins to get impatient, pressuring Jack to cross the bridge, knowing that once the cock crowed, he would be banished back to hell. Thinking quickly, Jack saw a stray dog nearby and tempted it with a bone. The starving dog was desperate for food, and so when it came bounding towards him in the expectation of a good meal he threw the bone, tricking the dog into crossing the bridge. The Devil fumed in rage as the first cock crowed, banish him and the unfortunate pooch to hell. Jack also seems to make a good living out of cheating the Devil. The Devil agrees to take all the ones with straight tails, our sorcerer feeds them plenty of beans and drives them though a stream, which apparently puts the requisite kink in them. Not only that, but in another story Jack and the Devil agree to split a crop of corn, half each! so Jack claims the top half of each stalk, meaning that he gets all the grain and leaves the Devil with a crop of shafts. The Devil tells Jack that he will have his soul whether he is buried inside or outside a church. The Devil, after years of being fleeced, promised Jack that he would carry him off, body and soul, to Hell for legendary torments. Check out Boo Tours website is www.boo-tours.com.

He lives in Cornwall with his wife Sam. Of this there are many instances on record. Tombs, stained glass, wooden carvings and even Bibles are employed to trap those who would unheed the warnings and so leave themselves open to vengeful horrors from beyond the grave. It is certainly one of the most peculiar burials that James used within the confines of his stories and certainly one of the most visual. Now it is just this. I had an old uncle, a Dr. Perhaps you may have heard of him. Not that he was a distinguished man, but from the odd way he chose to be buried. While it is impossible to state with any certainty as to the likely inspiration for the burial scene, I would tentatively suggest that there are four people whose burials may have influenced James in the writing of Rant. According to Ross and Taylor, local legend has it that McKenzie lost his soul to the Devil in a game of cards and so to cheat him out of his soul, McKenzie allegedly had his body seated at a table with a winning hand of cards in his hand. His logic being that if he looked as though he were alive, the Devil could not claim his soul. Elliot Davies reports that the spirit of McKenzie has been seen and like Rant, caused death: Such a sighting reportedly took place one Sunday night in the autumn of Emerging from the gloom ahead of him he saw the foreboding figure of a tall man in a top hat and a flowing cape. It literally scared the good Dr to death. Fuller was born in and went on to attend Eton School in He had a varied career and retired in , having the previous year, had a pyramid mausoleum built in the churchyard of Church of St. Local legend had it that he was buried in his top hat and full dress, seated at a table with a glass of wine in hand. Jacqueline Simpson has correctly pointed out that this legend did not see print until the s. He built Pentillie Castle in Saltash, Cornwall in When he died in it was stipulated in his will that he should not be buried, but instead be placed in a chamber under his folly, dressed in his finest clothes, bound to a chair, surrounded by his books, wine and pipe so as he could await resurrection. However, in , following renovations of a mausoleum in the grounds of Pentillie castle, the mystery has been solved. Following excavations in the mausoleum floor, archaeologists found a brick-built roof and further investigation found a structure underneath which contained human remains. There are various magazines and periodicals that talk of Tillie and his burial, all of which James could have read including: A series of articles on Antiquities there is a heated letter disputing how Tillie was buried. This controversy had long been a subject of debate as twenty-one years earlier Devonshire and Cornwall reported: His burial-place is distinguished by a small tower, erected on a conspicuous eminence at a short distance from the mansion, northwards; and which hill, according to Lysons, he used to call Mount Ararat. The country people shudder as they go near it: The Latin quotation may be thus translated;â€œ. This could be seen as comparable to what Mrs Simpson says of her uncle: Is this why Doctor Rant went to murder his nephew, because he was going to alter his home? Could James have used this question of faith as part of the character of Rant â€œ a clergyman who was actually an atheist, whose burial was to mock God â€œ again taking Tillie as his inspiration? It is this speculation and circumstantial evidence that leads me to venture that Tillie is, if not completely, the inspiration for Rant. Of course there are considerable differences between Tillie and Rant, the biggest being that legend has it that Tillie was brought food and wine for two years after his death until his servants could stand it no longer. Another difference is that that they were dressed differently; one dressed in ordinary clothes, the other in his finest, but this could be James just reversing that aspect. Despite local legend, it was not until seventeen years after McKenzie was buried that the pyramid was built on top of his grave which negates his influence. As for Fuller, his legend did not see print until after The Tractate Middoth was written and the legend was discovered to be a myth when renovations in proved that he was buried in the traditional manner. It is also plausible that James may have come across Tillie on one of his excursions to Cornwall. Again this is speculative, but there is one burial that James would have heard about without fail and that is the burial or non-burial of Sir John Knill. As an antiquarian, I would suggest that James may have enquired about the steeple and learnt about its history. John Knill was mayor of St. Ives in , and though a man of excellent character, slightly eccentric. He built this obelisk with a view to be buried in the vault which it contains, but his body was interred elsewhere. However, certain droll ceremonies which he directed to be performed here every five years, take place regularly. At his death Knill gave his body to the anatomists for dissection, in London; he also left certain property to the vicar, mayor, and collector of St. Agnes Beacon, and Carn Brea, is very fine. The closest by far in terms of similarity and notoriety is Sir James Tillie.

Although Dr Diana Brett lived on the island of St Flavia in the Caribbean, her practice stretched across the other islands and she used a seaplane to visit her patients.

Plot[edit] The Island of Doctor Moreau is the account of Edward Prendick, an Englishman with a scientific education who survives a shipwreck in the southern Pacific Ocean. A passing ship takes him aboard, and a man named Montgomery revives him. The ship is transporting a number of animals which belong to Montgomery. Montgomery explains that he will not be able to host Prendick on the island. Despite this, the captain leaves Prendick in a dinghy and sails away. Seeing that the captain has abandoned Prendick, Montgomery takes pity and rescues him. As ships rarely pass the island, Prendick will be housed in an outer room of an enclosed compound. The island belongs to Dr. Prendick remembers that he has heard of Moreau, formerly an eminent physiologist in London whose gruesome experiments in vivisection had been publicly exposed, and who fled England as a result of his exposure. The next day, Moreau begins working on a puma. Prendick gathers that Moreau is performing a painful experiment on the animal, and its anguished cries drive Prendick out into the jungle. While he wanders, he comes upon a group of people who seem human but have an unmistakable resemblance to swine. As he walks back to the enclosure, he suddenly realises he is being followed by a figure in the jungle. He panics and flees, and the figure gives chase. As his pursuer bears down on him, Prendick manages to stun him with a stone and observes the pursuer is a monstrous hybrid of animal and man. When Prendick returns to the enclosure and questions Montgomery, Montgomery refuses to be open with him. After failing to get an explanation, Prendick finally gives in and takes a sleeping draught. He believes that Moreau has been vivisectioning humans and that he is the next test subject. Their leader is a large grey thing named the Sayer of the Law who has him recite a strange litany called the Law that involves prohibitions against bestial behavior and praise for Moreau. Moreau bursts into the colony looking for Prendick, but Prendick escapes to the jungle. He makes for the ocean, where he plans to drown himself rather than allow Moreau to experiment on him. Moreau explains that the creatures called the Beast Folk were not formerly men, but rather animals. Prendick returns to the enclosure, where Moreau explains that he has been on the island for eleven years and has been striving to make a complete transformation of an animal to a human. He explains that while he is getting closer to perfection, his subjects have a habit of reverting to their animal form and behaviour. Moreau regards the pain he inflicts as insignificant and an unavoidable side effect in the name of his scientific experiments. One day, Prendick and Montgomery encounter a half-eaten rabbit. Since eating flesh and tasting blood are strong prohibitions, Dr. Moreau calls an assembly of the Beast Folk and identifies the Leopard -Man the same one that chased Prendick the first time he wandered into the jungle as the transgressor. Knowing that he will be sent back to Dr. Eventually, the group corners him in some undergrowth, but Prendick takes pity and shoots him to spare him from further suffering. Prendick also believes that although the Leopard-Man was seen breaking several laws, such as drinking water bent down like an animal, chasing men Prendick , and running on all fours, the Leopard-Man was not solely responsible for the deaths of the rabbits. It was also the Hyena - Swine , the next most dangerous Beast Man on the island. Moreau is furious that Prendick killed the Leopard-Man but can do nothing about the situation. As time passes, Prendick becomes inured to the grotesqueness of the Beast Folk. However one day, the half-finished puma woman rips free of her restraints and escapes from the lab. Moreau pursues her, but the two end up fighting each other which ends in a mutual kill. Montgomery breaks down and decides to share his alcohol with the Beast Folk. At the same time, the compound burns down because Prendick has knocked over a lamp. With no chance of saving any of the provisions stored in the enclosure, Prendick realizes that during the night Montgomery has also destroyed the only boats on the island. Prendick lives with the Beast Folk on the island for months after the deaths of Moreau and Montgomery. Bernard , and helped by the Sloth Creature he shoots the Hyena-Swine in self-defence. When he tells his story he is thought to be mad, so he feigns amnesia. Upon his return to England, Prendick is no longer comfortable in the presence of humans, all of whom seem to him to be about to revert to an animal state. He leaves London and lives in near-solitude in the countryside, devoting himself to chemistry as well as astronomy in the studies of which he finds some peace. Humans[edit] Edward Prendick â€” The narrator and protagonist. Moreau â€” A vivisectionist who has fled upon his experiments being exposed and has moved to a remote island in the Pacific to pursue his research of perfecting his Beast Folk. A medical doctor who enjoyed a measure of happiness in England. An alcoholic who feels some sympathy for the Beast Folk. Beast Folk[edit] The Beast Folk are animals which Moreau has experimented upon, giving them human traits via vivisection for which the surgery is extremely painful. Moreau combined a bear , a dog , and an ox to create him. He also sports glow-in-the-dark eyes and furry ears. Sayer of the Law â€” A large, grey-haired animal of unspecified combinations that recites Dr. The Sayer of the Law serves as a governor and a priest to the Beast Folk. He is later killed by Prendick in self-defence. Leopard -Man â€” A leopard-based rebel who breaks the Law by running on all fours, drinking from the stream, and chasing Prendick. The Leopard-Man is killed by Prendick to spare him further pain, much to the dismay of Dr. He is so like a domestic dog in character that Prendick is barely surprised when he reverts to a more animalistic form. Dog-Man is later killed by the Hyena-Swine. Satyr -Man â€” A goat creature. Prendick describes him as unsettling and " Satanic " in form. Fox - Bear Witch â€” A female hybrid of a fox and a bear who passionately supports the Law. Prendick quickly takes a dislike to her. Sloth Creature â€” A small, pink sloth-based creation described by Prendick as resembling a flayed child. He is one of the more relatively benign creatures, and helps Prendick kill the Hyena-Swine before fully regressing. Ape-Man â€” A monkey or ape creature that considers himself equal to Prendick and refers to himself and Prendick as "Five Men", because they both have five fingers on each hand, which is uncommon among the Beast Folk. She is halfway through her process of being turned into one of the Beast Folk, but was in so much pain from the surgery that she uses her strength to break free of her restraints and escape. Moreau then chases after her with a revolver. He and the creature fight each other which ends in a mutual kill. Several interest groups were formed to oppose vivisection, the two largest being the National Anti-Vivisection Society in and the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in Moreau reflects these themes, along with ideas of Darwinian evolution which were gaining popularity and controversy in the late s. Hope Martin , she is later privately adopted by a wealthy couple, Dr. Arthur Isles and Constance Isles , as their only child. As a child, she was shy and weird, spending a lot of time alone instead of with friends. She grew up not asking much from her adoptive parents, which resulted in their giving her less attention, emotionally affecting her more than she let on. When she was 10, she was sent to boarding school. In high school, she was nicknamed "Maura, The-Bore-A" because her classmates thought she was boring. She grew up knowing nothing about her biological parents, but she did always wonder what it was like to have a sibling, more than what it would be like to meet her parents. She did, however, try to look for them before she went off to college. She went to the fictional Boston Cambridge University for college. Once, during an equine dressage event, she rode nude on a horse as protest against the budget cuts. When she was 20, she became seriously romantically involved with Garrett Fairfield , but she did not choose to commit to him after college because of a gut feeling. Maura Isles is introduced in " See One. Not the best family reunion condition.. When she realizes that the man on her autopsy table is her brother, she becomes somehow emotional about wanting to know her biological parents and sibling. She asks Jane to find out who killed her brother and why, and ends up getting more than she bargains for when they discover who her biological father is: Patrick "Paddy" Doyle , the infamous Irish mob enforcer. Before the others could tell Maura what they found, Paddy goes to the morgue as "Selsi" Isles spelled backwards to identify Colin. Maura tries to get his DNA, and when Paddy realizes this, he flat out gives Maura a sample of his blood and leaves. She seems confused, not knowing whether she should be happy that she now knows who her father is, or if she should be bothered that her father is a stone-cold killer, even if the men he killed were all bad people. Patrick later "abducts" her so that he can talk to her without being spotted. He hints that she left him because of the fact that she never got to be with Maura because of who he was. He also tells him that Colin is her half-brother, that their mothers were different and that Colin was raised by his. Paddy then shows Maura his pictures of her, saying that he had always kept an eye on her, but Maura rejects him by saying that she grew up with a different father. She asks him how he could just kill people on command, and he replies that he only hurts people who deserve it, but Maura does not accept the answer. Paddy wants to keep her safe, saying that his enemies will get to her, but she turns the help away. She does, however, accept the phone that he gives her, asking her to call it when they find out who killed Colin so he could keep her safe from them. Other than that, Maura becomes distressed that she may end up having the evil genes of her father and half-brother. Jane, on the other hand, thinks Paddy may be dangerous but trusts that he wants to protect Maura. When they find the killer, Jane tries to convince Maura to call Paddy and give him information about the killer that may be out to get Maura. You are the dumbest genius I know. She tends to babble on about the state of the victim, the information being precise and using scientific terms. She also seems unable to help herself from telling those around her the etymology of terms brought up. She also used to never want to "guess" the conditions of the murder and of the victim, and is often irritated when Jane makes conclusions and conjectures outside of the autopsy; however, she has shown to begin making conclusions and guessing in some cases of the series. She absolutely loves examining dead bodies, saying that she used to prefer them over live ones, who would just judge, tease and make fun of her. She used to be afraid of people, or at least how they treat her, but she had gotten over it with exposure. Although still slightly socially awkward, she has become more comfortable with her colleagues. She does have a tendency of diagnosing people about their conditions a little too often. Maura is not easily ruffled and has a steady temperament. Also, in the past, Maura could not bring herself to lie; and apparently when she does so in the past, she begins to hyperventilate, although throughout the series, she has had to lie often for Jane, who encourages her to, and has eventually began lying as jokes to Jane. Despite this, she still gets hives and itches when she lies. She has an impeccable taste in clothing, always going around in nice clothes, even when going to work or just having a casual night at home. She also seems to shop online whenever she is stressed. She can analyze x-rays and blood chemistry, can slice open muscles and organs, but possesses no scalpel with which to dissect human emotions.

Once they marry, Facilier plans to murder Big Daddy via a pin in a voodoo doll, thus having the fortune handed over to Lawrence, the heir through marriage. Together, the two villains would split the money sixty-forty, with Lawrence getting the smaller sum. Meanwhile, Naveen manages to escape and heads off. With a voodoo doll of Big Daddy at hand, Dr. Facilier plans on stabbing the voodoo doll in the heart, thus killing Big Daddy and handing the fortune down to Lawrence as planned. Fortunately, Naveen escapes yet again and prevents this. The talisman is obtained by Naveen and given to his friend Ray the firefly. Facilier and the shadows chase after Ray while Naveen is being held captive by Lawrence. Ray manages to give the talisman over to Tiana, telling her she needs to keep it away from the Shadow Man. Tiana escapes with the talisman whilst Ray attacks the shadow demons to buy her time. Unfortunately, Facilier catches Ray by surprise and swats him out of the air, stunning him. Facilier then crushes Ray under his shoe, fatally wounding him. With him out of the way, the Shadow Man and his legion of demons head onwards to Tiana. Facilier and the shadows have Tiana cornered, soon enough. However, she threatens to destroy the talisman, prompting Facilier to quickly make an attempt to strike a deal. Subsequently, Tiana attempts to destroy the talisman, but Dr. Facilier then transforms Tiana back into a frog, before taunting her for refusing to accept his offer, and declaring that she will now spend the remainder of her life as a frog. However, Tiana manages to regain the talisman by grabbing hold of it with her elastic, frog tongue, destroying the trinket before Dr. Facilier can stop her. Facilier tries to persuade his former accomplices to provide him with another opportunity to redeem himself, and makes an attempt to escape, but the spirits grab hold of his shadow, thus capturing Dr. Facilier as well, subsequently dragging him into the voodoo spirit world, where his soul will be doomed to remain for all eternity.
