My house has doors built for death. When my husband and I first bought it a year ago, I won't say I fell in love with it, but it felt like a place that could become a home. Built in the s, the house has narrow stairways that appear in unexpected places and steps that creak and bend from more.

And foes bear arms to the Doors of Death. Contents [show] Description Much like how people can pass into Olympus using a magic elevator, the Doors of Death also appear as an elevator in and out of the Underworld. However unlike the elevator to Olympus, the Doors of Death are framed in Stygian Iron , with black and silver doors etched with art deco designs, making them a complete inversion of the Olympian doors. The Doors of Death act as a fast passage in and out of the Underworld for Thanatos, who is in control of bringing people to the Underworld, as well as making sure that no one ever escapes as well. Also, Thanatos is able to tell where the Doors of Death are at all times, even if they are not under his control. When the Doors of Death were in the possession of Gaea , she forced them open while Thanatos was captured and allowed monsters and evil souls to escape the pits of Tartarus in order to help her in her quest to destroy the Olympians and their children. In order to prevent Thanatos from simply moving them, they were chained in place. Also, in order for someone to pass from Tartarus into the mortal world, someone would have to hold the button for 12 minutes and someone else would have to hit the button on the mortal side, or else anything in the elevator would simply vanish. The Underworld side of the Doors were the chained in the heart of Tartarus while the mortal world side of the Doors were chained in House of Hades. Both locations were heavily guarded and both sides of the Doors needed to be freed in order for the Doors to reset. With the Doors in Tartarus, it was considered impossible to free them as no demigod could survive Tartarus and no god, as not even Thanatos himself would go there. For whatever reason only Jason, Hazel and Nico could see the magic of the Doors as they pumped out monsters in mass. There is a limit to their great power, if it is exceeded it would leave a permanent tear within the mortal world allowing permanent access between the two worlds. The last line of the prophecy says that foes will bear arms at the Doors of Death. No one knows what this means, but Apollo says that the prophecy may not come true during the demigods lifetimes. A sales woman there begins to charmspeak Jason and Leo into fighting each other, but Piper figures out that the woman is Medea ; a person who died during the time of the original Jason. Though Medea does not mention Gaea by name, she says that the dead are rising because the Doors of Death are opening to those able to help Gaea in her plans. This is proven true as the three eventually meet King Midas and his son, Lityerses ; two people who had been dead for centuries. He later manages to kill them by drowning them in water that puts them off from coming back for further time, by scattering their essence. Later, during the Roman War Games , Gwendolyn is impaled by a spear right through the chest and dies shortly after. However, a few moments later she comes back to life and explains that she was standing at the entrance to the Underworld , but there was an open door that she exited through, allowing herself to return to the land of the living. Mars then appears on the field and explains that the god Thanatos has been captured and eventually, even humans would start to return to life. However, Nico admits that even he does not understand the doors completely. This makes it hard for demigods as their enemies will not stay dead because Thanatos is unable to stop the souls from escaping as long as he is chained. After Frank manages to set Thanatos free, he stops the spirits that Percy is fighting from returning. Near the end, when Thanatos explains that he does not have the power to close the doors as he is no match for Gaea, but he can make it so that it takes longer for monsters to reform and possibly prevent souls in the Underworld from returning. He also explains that in order to close these doors, the demigods will have to go on a quest to the original Rome , and one of them must be able to read signs that lead them there. The two souls were Echo and Narcissus , but unlike other escapees they were not working for Gaea and Echo even helped Leo and Hazel steal the celestial bronze of Narcissus. Later, after rescuing Nico di Angelo , the group learns about where the two entrances to the Doors of Death are. One is in the city of Epirus in Greece in an underground temple called the House of Hades , while the other entrance is in the deepest parts of the Underworld , Tartarus. While Nico was searching for the entrance, he thought he could go to Tartarus because he was a son of Hades. However, the power of the pit pulled him in and he was captured by Gaea and her forces. Then when the time was right, Nico was transported through the doors to the world of the living, where Otis and Ephialtes used him as bait to lure the crew of the Argo II to them. Nico di Angelo, a demigod who got caught trying to find the Doors of Death. After Annabeth Chase managed to defeat Arachne, the spider thrashed around, almost collapsing the room which would send them both to Tartarus. While most of the crew manage to escape after Arachne fell through the floor, a strand of spider thread began to pull Annabeth down toward the pit and Percy Jackson quickly ran over to catch her, resulting in being pulled into the pit himself. While they held onto a ledge, with Arachne trying to pull them with her, saying "I go to Tartarus, and you will come too. Nico understood, leading to Percy and Annabeth falling into Tartarus together. Back on the Argo II, Nico explains that in order to close the doors, they must be in control on both sides, in Tartarus and in Epirus. While Leo plans on saving Percy and Annabeth, he knows that someone will have to be left behind to close the doors on the Tartarus side, and wonders how Percy and Annabeth will survive long enough to make it to the doors. He says that if he has to make a grabber arm long enough to grab Percy and Annabeth out of Tartarus, he will. They originally follow Kelli, who is also trying to reach the doors in order to return to the mortal world and take her revenge for being killed. They eventually ambush Percy and Annabeth, who are saved by Iapetus and he takes them to the Doors of Death himself. In order to hide them from monsters, he shrouds them in Death Mist and takes them to the heart of Tartarus. While at the Doors of Death, Percy and Annabeth see many monsters that they had fought in the mortal world, all waiting for a chance to return. They also see that the Doors of Death are chained down in order to prevent Thanatos from calling them. Percy and Annabeth begin to cut the chains holding the doors, but Tartarus appears in his godly form and attacks them. Iapetus, Small Bob, and Damasen a friendly Gigantes fight off Tartarus long enough for Percy and Annabeth to break the chains and enter the elevator. Percy Jackson and Annabeth Chase, who went through the Doors of Death in the mortal world, Nico di Angelo and Hazel Levesque see the massive energy caused by the Doors of Death constantly bringing souls and monsters back from Tartarus and follow the light to the House of Hades. They see the elevator button light up and are told that if no one presses the button in the twelve minutes it will take for the elevator to reach the mortal world, all those in the elevator will simply vanish. They are also told that all the defeated Gigantes have already been revived with the help of the doors. Echo and Narcissus are the only known souls to escape the Underworld using the Doors of Death, but do not work for Gaea. Some souls that escape the Underworld using the Doors of Death appear to be more ghostly like Medea and Otrera, while others seem to be completely indistinguishable from regular mortals like Echo and Midas. It is unknown what causes this.

Email This morning Elder Boyd K. Recently at the funeral of a friend, I visited with two distinguished brothersâ€”former surgical colleagues of mineâ€”whose lovely companions had both passed away. They said they were going through the most difficult period of their lives, adjusting to the almost unbearable loss of their partners. These wonderful men then told of their cooking breakfast for each other once a weekâ€”sharing that rotation with their sisterâ€”trying to lessen their loneliness imposed by the doors of death. That separation evokes pangs of sorrow and shock among those left behind. The hurt is real. Only its intensity varies. Some doors are heavier than others. The sense of tragedy may be related to age. Generally the younger the victim, the greater the grief. Yet even when the elderly or infirm have been afforded merciful relief, their loved ones are rarely ready to let go. The only length of life that seems to satisfy the longings of the human heart is life everlasting. Mourning Irrespective of age, we mourn for those loved and lost. Mourning is one of the deepest expressions of pure love. It is a natural response in complete accord with divine commandment: The only way to take sorrow out of death is to take love out of life. In speaking at a funeral of a loved one, the Prophet Joseph Smith offered this admonition: Life does not begin with birth, nor does it end with death. Prior to our birth, we dwelled as spirit children with our Father in Heaven. There we eagerly anticipated the possibility of coming to earth and obtaining a physical body. Knowingly we wanted the risks of mortality, which would allow the exercise of agency and accountability. But we regarded the returning home as the best part of that long-awaited trip, just as we do now. Before embarking on any journey, we like to have some assurance of a round-trip ticket. Returning from earth to life in our heavenly home requires passage throughâ€”and not aroundâ€”the doors of death. We were born to die, and we die to live. As seedlings of God, we barely blossom on earth; we fully flower in heaven. Think of the alternative. If all sixty-nine billion people who have ever lived on earth were still here, imagine the traffic jam! And we could own virtually nothing and scarcely make any responsible decisions. Plan of Happiness Scriptures teach that death is essential to happiness: Our limited perspective would be enlarged if we could witness the reunion on the other side of the veil, when doors of death open to those returning home. Spiritual Death But there is another type of separation known in scripture as spiritual death. Thus, one can be very much alive physically but dead spiritually. Spiritual death is more likely when goals are unbalanced toward things physical. Paul explained this concept to the Romans: If physical death should strike before moral wrongs have been made right, opportunity for repentance will have been forfeited. Even the Savior cannot save us in our sins. He will redeem us from our sins, but only upon condition of our repentance. We are responsible for our own spiritual survival or death. Coping with Trials The Savior of the world repeatedly asked that we pattern our lives after His. So we must endure trialsâ€”as did He. When hardship heaps its heavy load upon us, good may yet be gleaned. Sweet are the uses of adversity, Which like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Postmortal Life Mortality, temporary as it is, is terminated by the doors of death. Questions then come to searching minds of those left behind. Paradise The first station in postmortal life is named paradise. Resurrection and Immortality Some facetiously state that nothing is as permanent as death. The grip of physical death is temporary. It began with the fall of Adam; it ended with the atonement of Jesus the Christ. The waiting period in paradise is temporary, too. It ends with the resurrection. A few years ago, our stake president and his wife had a wonderful son taken in his youthful prime because of an automobile accident. The Lord who created us in the first place surely has power to do it again. The same necessary elements now in our bodies will still be availableâ€”at His command. The same unique genetic code now embedded in each of our living cells will still be available to format new ones then. The miracle of the resurrection, wondrous as it will be, is marvelously matched by the miracle of our creation in the first place. Judgment Our resurrection will not be an end but a new beginning. Even before we approach that threshold of the eternal court of justice, we know who will personally preside:

Family Ties Loving relationships continue beyond the doors of death and judgment. Family ties endure because of sealings in the temple. Their importance cannot be overstated. I remember vividly an experience I had as a passenger in a small two-propeller airplane. One of its engines suddenly burst open and caught on fire. The propeller of the flaming engine was starkly stilled. As we plummeted in a steep spiral dive toward the earth, I expected to die. Some of the passengers screamed in hysterical panic. Miraculously, the precipitous dive extinguished the flames. Then, by starting up the other engine, the pilot was able to stabilize the plane and bring us down safely. I remember a sense of returning home to meet ancestors for whom I had done temple work. I remember my deep sense of gratitude that my sweetheart and I had been sealed eternally to each other and to our children, born and reared in the covenant. I realized that our marriage in the temple was my most important accomplishment. Honors bestowed upon me by men could not approach the inner peace provided by sealings performed in the house of the Lord. That harrowing experience consumed but a few minutes, yet my entire life flashed before my mind. Eternal Life After judgment comes the possibility of eternal life—the kind of life that our Heavenly Father lives. His celestial realm has been compared with the glory of the sun. It is available to all who prepare for it, the requirements of which have been clearly revealed: Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. Unfinished business is our worst business. Perpetual procrastination must yield to perceptive preparation. Today we have a little more time to bless others—time to be kinder, more compassionate, quicker to thank and slower to scold, more generous in sharing, more gracious in caring. Then when our turn comes to pass through the doors of death, we can say as did Paul: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. We need not look upon death as an enemy. With full understanding and preparation, faith supplants fear. He bestowed this gift: Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. As a special witness of Jesus Christ, I testify that He lives! I also testify that the veil of death is very thin. I know by experiences too sacred to relate that those who have gone before are not strangers to leaders of this Church. To us and to you, our loved ones may be just as close as the next room—separated only by the doors of death. With that assurance, brothers and sisters, love life! Cherish each moment as a blessing from God. Live it well—even to your loftiest potential. Then the anticipation of death shall not hold you hostage. With the help of the Lord, your deeds and desires will qualify you to receive everlasting joy, glory, immortality, and eternal lives. For this I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, amen.

The doorway stands beyond man, at the end of a long hallway filled with sights beyond reason. It is a place where the universe begins and ends, where we begin and end, and deep down within our hearts, where we keep our secrets and imagine our stories, it lives there too.
