Bliss Carman was born and grew up in Canada, but lived most of his life in the United States, where he achieved international fame. But unlike others, he never attempted to secure his income by novel writing, popular journalism, or non-literary employment. He remained a poet, supplementing his art with critical commentaries on literary ideas, philosophy, and aesthetics. His sister married the botanist and historian William Francis Ganong. Courtesy New Brunswick Literary Encyclopedia. Carman attended Fredericton Collegiate School, where he came under the influence of headmaster George Robert Parkin, who gave him a love of classical literature, [7] and introduced him to the poetry of Dante Gabriel Rossetti and Algernon Charles Swinburne. His first published poem appeared in the UNB Monthly in 1884. He then spent a year at Oxford and the University of Edinburgh, but returned home to receive his M.A. Photo by Pirie Macdonald. Literary critic Desmond Pacey considered "Low Tide It will withstand any amount of critical scrutiny. What is more, although Carman would publish over thirty other volumes during his lifetime, none of them contains anything that surpasses this poem he wrote when he was barely twenty-five years old. It was the heartiness, the gypsy jollity, the rush of high spirits, that conquered. Readers of the Vagabondia books were swept along by their speed faster than by their philosophy. Bliss Carman and the late Richard Hovey. Hovey had died in More of a remembrance book than part of the set, it has a distinct elegiac tone. It contains the lyric "The Flute of Spring". The poem does not succeed: Its notable poems include the macabre sea shanty , The Gravedigger. It served as the title poem of his collection, a book of formal elegies. In the last poem in the book, "The Grave-Tree," Carman writes about his own death. One Hundred Lyrics[ edit ] Main article: One Hundred Lyrics First edition of Sappho, Perhaps because of the underlying concept, Sappho: Most of her poetry, which was well-known and greatly admired throughout antiquity, has been lost, but her reputation has endured, supported by the surviving fragments of some of her poems. Roberts saw it in his Introduction to the book,"apparently, has been to imagine each lost lyric as discovered, and then to translate it; for the indefinable flavor of the translation is maintained throughout, though accompanied by the fluidity and freedom of purely original work. Nevertheless, the feelings ascribed to Sappho are pure Carman in their sensitive and elegiac melancholy. Hence the lyric poet, after he has run his gamut of impressions, must die young, develop a more intellectualized attitude, or start repeating himself. He "published four other collections of new poetry during his lifetime and two more were ready for publication at the time of his death: The "Sunshine House" sonnets. The best of these have the same nostalgic air of melancholy and loss with which Carman began in "Low Tide Roberts and Francis Joseph Sherman.
