If you plan to make many small or several major text corrections to a document, we recommend you go back to the source file and make the changes there. This gives more precise control over the exact layout and look, and there may be an opportunity to automate the corrections to save time. On the Home tab, in the Tools group, click Type Text To type text, click the page where you want to insert text On the Format tab, use the text options to set the appearance of the text, such as the font and size Enter your text, and press Escape or click Finish when complete TIP: When you type text, it is inserted on the annotation layer by default. To insert text on the content layer, Ctrl-click the page where you want to insert text. For more information, see Annotation layer and content layer. As you type, the bounding-box resizes itself to fit text When you have finished editing the text, press Escape, click elsewhere on the page, or click Finish NOTE: If you enter a character with a font that not installed, Nitro Pro 7 automatically tries to select a font with a similar appearance. You may notice the font name change while you edit text. If Nitro Pro 7 cannot determine a related font, it uses a generic font. We advise you to confirm that selected fonts are similar in appearance, and apply another font if necessary. For more information, see Embedded fonts. Move text To move text, click the Edit tool on a paragraph or heading to select it, and do one of the following: Drag the bounding-box to a new location Use the arrow keys on your keyboard to nudge the bounding-box in small increments To delete a paragraph or image: Click on it once to show the light blue bounding-box for the text or image. Press Delete, or right-click on the text and select Delete from the menu. Flatten text Moving text from the annotation layer to the content layer is known as flattening text. To flatten text, do one of the following: This flattens all annotations, including form fields, sticky notes, links, and other markup annotations. Add or edit text.
