To improve your language skills try the vocabulary trainer. The correctness of the translations cannot be guaranteed nobody is perfect, but all input will be checked carefully. If you spot an error, please report it using the info button [i] located next to each translation within the search results. Still the usage trend is towards mobile use apps and mobile website and away from the desktop website, I can also see this in the support requests I get by e-mail. In the last year I reprogrammed the Android app from scratch, releasing lots of alpha, beta and bugfix versions, so now the Android app is pretty stable. Reprogramming the iPhone version of the app is still in the works. Even though the app rewrites are not finished yet I added another new feature to the desktop website this year, the translation wish list. It seems to be working quite well and has led to a lot of useful new translation entries already. I have been told that I should also add the well-known cookie message that pops up everywhere on the web nowadays. But I refuse to do that because I find these popups really annoying. If data privacy is really important for you, you will delete your cookies regularly, but as the "closed" status of the message can only be stored using cookies, these messages will keep reappearing, making things even worse. So before I change dict. Again, the yearly statistics snapshot: Changing language pairs now also possible using search suggestions. Just type in a token like "hu" or "desv" and pick the first suggestion. Choosing from the suggestion list should also work using the tab key on the keyboard now. The suggestions that appear when typing in a search keyword now tolerate typos. If a word was typed in correctly and completely, so it can be searched for just by pressing the enter key, it will be printed in bold letters within the suggestions window. The audio wish list is now available for all languages.
