Chapter 2 : Index: Stories, Listed by Title

This is a fantastic (pun intended) assortment of tales for lovers of all things prehistoric. The stories herein run the gamut from sobering, post-apocalyptic scenarios to darkly humorous, occasionally quirky and whimsical tales of dinosaurs and humans living alongside one another in society.

Talk to Laura Louie about the overwhelming kindness she and her two small daughters experienced in this distant corner of Canada, briefly transformed by a twist of history into an international aviation hub. But for me it was when I was reminded what humanity is. Many of them have made deep friendships with the islanders who cared for them, and some will travel here for the 10th anniversary commemorations. She visited her on the first anniversary, and is returning for the 10th. Cooper, now 70, keeps a large collection of thank-you letters from the many people she helped in different ways. Beulah was a mother figure. We were informed that the United States had closed its airspace to all incoming traffic, all planes were grounded in the United States, and that any planes flying into the U. Frankly it was as brutal as that. The Canadians shunted the traffic away from Toronto and Montreal to the eastern seaboard, and obscure, little used Gander got to relive its glory days as a stopover point for trans-Atlantic aviation before long-distance flights became possible. The Canadian military flew in 5, cots. Stores donated blankets, coffee machines, barbecue grills. Unable to retrieve their luggage, passengers became dependent on the kindness of strangers, and it came in the shape of clothes, showers, toys, banks of phones to call home free of charge, an arena that became a giant walk-in fridge full of donated food. Doug Dillon switched from controlling traffic to delivering medical prescriptions to passengers in need. His father, Des, led the efforts for the Canadian Red Cross, and his brother and mother joined in the efforts to make the guests comfortable. So did neighboring communities such as Gambo and Lewisporte. We were passengers and they fed us three meals a day. They celebrated us like we were five-star guests. They were so full of love. Louie, who is 46 and now married to actor Woody Harrelson, remembered a family across the street who saw her daughters aged 5 and 8, and invited them into their home, let them play for two hours, and offered them a change of clothes. One of the Americans coming back is Shirley Brooks-Jones. She was so overwhelmed by the experience of that as her plane left Gander, she told her fellow passengers over the cabin address system that she wanted to set up a scholarship fund for students in Lewisporte, where they stayed. Brooks-Jones has been back 20 times, to present the scholarships every June and to attend each anniversary. Reprinted here for educational purposes only.
