When you refuse to surrender with all your heart, only then do you transcend your humanity. It is an undeniable fact of nature, no Physics on the other hand is nothing if not rational, and I am reaching out to your rational selves right now. And most of us spend our entire lives devoted to ducking, dodging or ignoring that very reaction that we cause into being. He has a fancy degree from one of those fancy yet second tier state schools where one of the presidents has their library. It is for effect. And this is a Hee-Haw digression. And this one, she broke his heart into ever smaller pieces. So, he found another one. And this one did too. By three different yet eerily similar women. Today he has nothing. Yet, he has the most precious gift that God has ever given man. Failure is our friend. Its lessons remain embedded in us, long after its wounds have healed. But make no mistake, failure hurts. But it is through our failures that we grow. So he replaced it. He never bothered to face the pain of his original failure. Now he hurts even more. We must face, and endure the consequences of our failures. Therein lies the gift of failure. Therein lies the opportunity for growth and advancement. That is where each one of us find ourselves every single day, in the fell clutch of circumstance. How we handle the situation is what makes us who we are. In the fell clutch of circumstance, I have not winced, nor cried aloud. Under the bludgeoning of chance, my head is bloodied, but unbowed. We must face the consequences of our actions. If we fail, then we must embrace the consequences of our failure. So that we can learn. So that we can heal. So that we can come back stronger. Beyond this place of wrath and tears Looms but the Horror of the shade, And yet the menace of the years Finds, and shall find, me unafraid. Failing teaches us what we can endure. I have experienced bad credit, heart-break, poverty, hunger, loss and betrayal. I have stared down the barrel of a gun poised to end my life. I have been evicted, suspended, expelled, fired, over ruled, over turned, ostracized and double crossed. Sometimes more than once. And this is an intellectual-honesty digression. And yet, today I find myself in a position that five years ago was unthinkable. Yes I have possessions. This is a fore-shadowing digression. I make more money than I ever have. More than entire households. Yes, my office overlooks the bay, and beyond that the Atlantic. But these things are not who I am, because these are but my successes. Who I am, I owe to my God and my failures. Because when you have nothing to lose, you have everything to gain. It matters not how strait the gate How charged with punishments the scroll I am the master of my fate I am the captain of my soul. Our failures are our greatest teachers. Yet if we do not face and endure the pain that we have earned "remember, our failures are our own" and take ownership of both the problem, and the course of action, we will do nothing but ensure more failure. So, going forward, when failure strikes, how shall you handle it? The first mistake people make is not acknowledging a failure. All of your failures are attributable to you. Your failures are your own. No matter the situation, you failed because you failed. The next mistake that people make is that they wallow in the failure. Do not bend the ear of every Tom, Dick and Harry you meet with your failure. You are not helping yourself. And you will never succeed by wallowing. Hell, you can pour your entire failure into one heck of a depressing novel, sell million copies around the world, because everyone can feel your pain, and go home and put a bullet in your head. Wallowing begets depression which begets more failure. Depression feeds on failure. Want a tip on how to stop wallowing? Next time you feel yourself wallow in that depression, remind yourself of the fact that you are still breathing. As long as you are breathing you can win. Next, set about succeeding. Rack up a few small victories. Build up your confidence. For instance, if your failure is financial, take some baby steps. Grab one bill, just one, and make it your focus. Every day, accrue another success. Long-time readers will note that I spend little time belaboring what the white man did to us. We succeed or we fail by our own actions. You succeed and you fail by your own actions. Just wait till Thursday. Now, go out there and succeed. But I am only stopping through. See, your boy done went corporate. Yeah, I got staff bitches. And not staph, like some people thought I would get yeah, Sonnyredd also has a cleaning lady. The Redd Squadron is in full effect. This is a movement, dammit! I have no real problem with it We are pro-Star round this way; and 2 next time you write "f-ed" in lieu of "fucked" I will personally get on a plane to Boston and beat the everloving fuck-shit out of you. Two in one preamble. Anyway, I proudly present Young Lucky X: A post on this buffoonery is forthcoming. Needless to say, I needed something to reaffirm my hope in Black folks. I double clicked the podcast to hear the following guest list. Karrine Steffans, I thought. That name sounds familiar. Who the hell is Karrine Steffans? Some unsuspecting child -- or worse -- a Mormon will read this and not know what Lucky was saying. Listening to Superhead preach to me about black female images in the media is about as tolerable as Condoleezza Rice giving me lessons on proper dental care. Steffans is a former hip-hop video dancer who, last year, released a best seller, Confessions of a Video Vixen. Her pseudonym is self explanatory. The discussion circled around the alleged rape at Duke University and focused on the images of black women in the media, particularly in commercial hip hop videos. About 3 minutes into the discussion Superhead, in a brazen attempt at articulation opens her fat mouth.
