Free to be single by Elva McAllaster, , Christian Herald Books edition, in English - 1st ed.

He had been with his girlfriend since they were 16, but now that they are into their young twenties, she has expressed a want for being single again. Quite the opposite, actually. He thinks that if he were to be single, he would immediately search for a relationship such as the one he already has. She wants to be single and live free for a while. She feels that her life is flying right past her. So she takes action. She breaks up with you. But she still wants you. She probably still calls you once in a while. Perhaps you even meet up. You miss her like hell. And she misses you, too. But she still wants the love and stability that you have provided her for so long. And in this example, that would include her to be happy, too. You want you both to be happy. Her reaction is to break up to feel free. Anyway, your first reaction is most likely to be hurt. And do you know why? Sure, you always play a small part, but usually it is extremely small. Instead of feeling hurt, I really recommend that you look at the situation a little less emotionally. But she wants something else. Preferably at the same time. In other words, she is confused like hell. Being a rock means two things: Knowing what you want And taking action on it Both without any direct emotion. Cool like a rock. What that means for you is that if you found out that you want you both to be happy, you give her that space. So I let you go. Do what you need to do to feel happy. But you need to know this: And I think that you should be. If you truly love her, you should give her the chance to taste the apple if she never has. You have to give her the chance. So do it with love. Do it with respect. And she will love you and respect you for it no matter what her final decision is. And chance is, she tries out the freedom thing for a few days. Perhaps she goes on a date. And it feels horrible to her. And her need to act out and be free will be gone forever. If you have ANY troubles with your ex-girlfriend, chances are that you will find that magic bullet that you so desperately need in the ebook. Go find that magic bullet now!

Chapter 2 : Single and Free to be Me | FamilyLife Today®

There's a right way to be single, a wrong way to be single, and then there's Alice. And Robin. Lucy. Meg. Tom. David. New York City is full of lonely hearts seeking the right match, be it a love connection, a hook-up, or something in the middle.

I was always in a relationship. Not long after that I got into a two-year relationship with a man who loved, yet cheated on me. It was a messy breakup. So after ten years in relationships, I found myself alone. Recently some questions have bounced around in mind: What happened to me during those years? What did I get, gain, achieve in these two relationships? Why am I now alone? What will I do? How do I do things by myself? I started to panic, to hyperventilate—until I found this quote: It is a word that describes a person who is strong enough to live and enjoy life without depending on others. I was so used to sharing everything. I was so used to having someone around. So I started reading about being single, and interviewing other happy single people. I needed to find proven ways to be happy as a single adult woman. In my research, I learned some important truths about being single: Being single gives you time to be by yourself, with yourself. Finally, some me time. This is the time to reconnect with myself, a time where I can talk to myself, debating all the questions and answers that are bouncing in my head. This is the time of reflection. This is the time of acceptance and letting go, which brings me to the second point—2. Yes, I have fond memories of my exes, but that was in the past. I know I will always cherish those memories, but I need to stop clinging to them to live for today and plan for tomorrow. Buddha said every day you are born again—that means new experiences and adventures for today! During those ten years, I lost love, a pregnancy, and my health. I truly believed I had lost everything. Change can sometimes be good. Part of me feels afraid of this quick change. Sometimes change is the best thing for us, as it opens us up to new activities and environments. Being single does not have to mean being afraid to love. My heart has been bashed, bruised, and broken. Hopefully the next someone will treasure and treat my heart with love and respect. It reminded me that even with a broken heart, I am still standing. There are still so many possibilities for me. I am lucky to have a supportive mother and sister. They are my sanity—my light. Spending time with them relaxes me in a way. I know for sure I can always share my happiness and sorrow with them. I can always depend on them without feeling the slightest bit of guilt. Being single is a call to focus on yourself. Sometimes being in a relationship can make you lazy about developing yourself. You can get so comfortable that your goals take a back seat. Life is a balance. When there is darkness there will be light. I believe that everything in life is a process. When something dramatic and fast hits us, it will take time to process it and start over. I am starting over. As a newbie in singlehood I still have a lot to learn, understand, and explore. I sometimes need to be reminded to be grateful for what I have. As we all know, these words are easier said than practiced. Change comes from within. You alone have to decide if you want that change.
