

Chapter 1 : FictFact - Laura Lee Hope author of Bobbsey Twins series

The Bobbsey Twins Series speaks to children at an age when their values are being formed. And it speaks well for values, which is something that is missing in today's.

The Clue in Blue - The Riddle in Red - Puzzle in Purple - The Secret of Black Cat Gulch - The Green Island Mystery - The Ghost Wore White - The Yellow Warning - The Gray Menace - The Brown Satchel Mystery - Peril in Pink - The Silver Secret - The Mystery of the Ruby Queens - Connie Blair is the central character in a series of 12 mystery novels for adolescent girls written by Betty Cavanna under the pseudonym Betsy Allen. Cavanna wrote volumes 1 through 12. Initially published with dust jackets, when the first four titles were republished in the early 1930s the change was made to picture covers. In 1934, three titles were republished by Tempo in paperback editions, again with new cover art. Foreign editions are known from Great Britain, Norway and Sweden. In the beginning, teenager Connie Blair models clothes at an exclusive department store in Philadelphia. She then becomes a secretary at an advertising firm, and works her way to a more important position. Her various jobs are the backdrops for the mysteries she encounters and solves. Christopher Cool: While the author is given as Jack Lancer, this is actually a pseudonym for a ghostwriter working for the Syndicate. In an interview published in Comics Interview 69, Jim Lawrence disclosed that he was the author of the series. Lawrence went on to write the long running newspaper strip adventures of James Bond. The series was created to capitalize on the marketing potential of the spy genre of the era. Six novels were published. The novels show the TEEN agents going to various foreign countries. As was typical of the spy genre of the time, they are outfitted with many spy gadgets. All of the six novels were published in France by Hachette between 1934 and 1936 under the title: X Marks the Spy - 2: Moonfire - 3: Department of Danger - 4: Ace of Shadows - 5: Heads You Lose - 6: Trial By Fury - Dana Girls A Three Cornered Mystery - The Secret At The Hermitage - The Circle Of Footprints - The Clue In The Cobweb - The Secret At The Gatehouse - The Mysterious Fireplace - The Portrait In The Sand - The Clue In The Ivy - Mystery At The Crossroads - The Ghost In The Gallery - The Winking Ruby Mystery - The Haunted Lagoon - The Sierra Gold Mystery - The Secret Of Lost Lake -

These books each have a plain paper frontispiece illustration and have poor quality paper. From through around , the books have a tweed cover. Around to , the series switched to the lavender spine picture cover format. It is important to note that not all of the Bobbsey Twins books were printed in the lavender spine picture cover format during the s and s. It is impossible to obtain a complete set of volumes 1 through 72 in the lavender spine format. I do not know for certain which titles were omitted, but I believe it is some of the books that were never revised, such as volumes 21 through 23 among others. For more information and pictures about the different Bobbsey Twins formats, there is an excellent website with this information. It can easily be found by searching the internet for Bobbsey Twins formats. Generally, there is not as much demand for Bobbsey Twins books as for other vintage series books. However, certain formats that are more scarce will sell for higher prices when several buyers are interested. This guide is not intended to be a price guide since it is impossible to predict what a certain book will bring at any given time. First printings The copyright page is the last place to look when trying to determine whether a Bobbsey Twins book is the first printing. The copyright pages were rarely updated by Grosset and Dunlap. If the book does not have a dust jacket and if it is one of the thick, earlier books with glossy illustrations, look in the back of the book after the end of the story to see if there is a list of Bobbsey Twins titles. If the book is one of the less thick books that has a plain paper frontispiece, there may be a list in the front of the book on a page other than the copyright page. Do not use any list that may appear on the copyright page. For the lavender spine books, there is a list of titles that appears on the back cover of the book. Once an appropriate list of titles has been found, refer to the last title in the list. The last title listed determines the year of printing. Nan and Bert are always twelve; Freddie and Flossie are always six. The family always lives in a big house, always has a good time, and always figures things out by the last page. They are, in short, the ideal nuclear family of the age-old American Dream variety, smiling in the land of plenty where no shadow can threaten unhappiness or want. Many of the books are simply accounts of childish adventures; others have a mystery element, but the mysteries are seldom dark or scary, almost never violent, and generally end in relieved laughter and hugs all around. Bobbsey fill their traditional gender roles. The whole series is full of harmless fun, easy reading, and lighthearted Americana. At the same time, a steady diet without interruptions will likely leave them without a taste for really good literature, and without a desire to improve intellectually. The first Bobbsey Twin book appeared in , and is rumored to be the work of Edward Stratemeyer himself. In the beginning, the kids got older as the series progressed, but the writers realized the Twins were getting too old and locked them at the ages of twelve and six. Hollis Crossman used to be a child. Now he is a husband and father, teaches adult Sunday school in his Presbyterian congregation, and likes weird stuff. Read more of his reviews here. Who Wrote the Bobbsey Twins? Keeline The Bobbsey Twins series is probably the longest-running juvenile book series of all time. The first book was published in and new volumes were added as late as A version of this information was previously published in Yellowback Library in September before the NYPL collection was available to researchers. This version contains some corrections to the previous data and reflects the best current knowledge for the authorship of this series. The original text of this volume was written personally by Edward Stratemeyer in April and published by Mershon later that year. This is somewhat unusual because there are very few times when Stratemeyer personally wrote one volume and had the series continued by ghostwriters. One other example of this type is the Dave Fearless series where Stratemeyer is believed to have written the initial volume, Rival Ocean Divers, because it was published as a serial in a periodical. One other example is the first mystery story published under the "Chester K. Collier "dime novels" in the s. The other "Steele" mysteries were written by ghostwriters, including writers who worked on the Bobbsey Twins and others. Lilian was the wife of Howard R. She was a newspaper reporter for the Newark Evening News and author of many books under her own name, mostly after her Syndicate work. It is believed that these two titles and a reprint of the first volume were published by Chatterton-Peck in However, very few copies were sold and copies of Bobbsey Twins books actually published by not merely with a copyright message which mentions Mershon, Stitt circa , or Chatterton-Peck are extremely scarce. So far, only the first and second titles have been seen in Chatterton-Peck editions. It is quite possible that, despite the copyright date of for Bobbsey Twins at the Seashore, that it was not actually issued by Chatterton-Peck. Garis was the principal author of most of the early volumes of the series. Volume 24 in lists both Howard R. Garis and another writer, Margery Howard. Adams is listed as having written the outline for volumes 25 and The outline for volume 28 was supplied by Edna Camilla Squier Garis did write one additional title in Beginning in late and throughout , Howard R. With the exception of a Bobbsey Twins volume published in , his last Syndicate volumes were published in
