June 28, Exodus 3: And this will be the sign to you that it is I who have sent you: When you have brought the people out of Egypt, you will worship God on this mountain. True deliverance is not the change from this condition to that condition but the movement from slavery to freedom and it is signaled by the unfettered worship of the delivered. There are many who have reigned in an addiction to some substance but remain enslaved. Though they have moved from uncontrolled substance abuse to abstinence, so many have not yet experienced deliverance from slavery to freedom. They may seem to have gotten out of Egypt, but Egypt is not yet out of them. The sign of deliverance is the worship of the only true and living God: Every other god is a false god which demands total allegiance and delivers slavish attachment. I find it interesting how the conversation around addiction centers around the language of recovery rather than deliverance. My problem is their starting place. They do not begin with the vision of Divine freedom but rather with unmanageable addiction. As a result, they do not end with Divine freedom but managed addiction. The human condition is slavery, whether voluntary or involuntary. Human beings, by nature, will have a master, even if we believe that master to be ourselves. God, by nature, will only be the master of those who willingly surrender their allegiance to him, but the beauty of this surrender is the way he returns his allegiance to his followers. Deliverance is rescue from the bondage of a false god and the restoration of bonding with the true God. No less than ten times we see some form of this petition from Moses to Pharaoh. Let my people go, so that they may worship me. Let my people go. So that they may worship me. Return to bonding i. What if we practiced this very form of prayer as deliverance? So often we say our prayers to God, which is fine, but I wonder what impact it might have if we began speaking our prayers in the form of the Word of God directly into the face of evil. How about like this? Take comfort from Moses, who never gave in until Pharaoh gave up. Every time we gather in the fellowship of the New Room we end our time with a raucous singing of what we call our fight song. Something about a song of deliverance takes us inside of itself and hides us in the shelter of the most high God. Songs of deliverance are poetry carried by the Spirit of God into the realm of prophecy. We do not so much sing these songs as they sing us. Thine eye diffused a quickening ray. I woke the dungeon flamed with light. My chains fell off. My heart was free. I rose, went forth and followed Thee. That last line is not even sung. Every hand in the room lifts like a rocket en route to the heavens. And the sound of chains hitting the floor is palpable. This is your conference. You fill me with songs of deliverance. In fact, you are my song of deliverance. Help me hear that song deeper and deeper. Teach me to sing it into the face of darkness and evil. You are my deliverer. What do you make of this transformation from bondage to bonding? How are they related? How are they different in your experience? And yes I am throwing a pre-conference party in your honor on that Wednesday morning September 19 before the Conference officially kicks off at noon.

On the first night of Pesach it is incumbent upon each and every Jew according to our practice to view ourselves as if we left the bondage of Egypt. Most Jews are free, enjoy many liberties and are prospering. Millions of us even sit in the promised land on this very night! It is a far cry from the days of old when we were bitterly enslaved, beaten and desperate at the hands of the Egyptians. We spend countless hours cleaning and preparing for this holiday. So much so that it has become a tired old joke that by the time Pesach rolls around we actually truly know what it is like to be enslaved. First, we have to use up all our food which is such an arduous task for us food hoarders that are in habit of stock piling so much food that we need to start whittling down weeks in advance. We then need to buy all new food, kosher our kitchens, clean our cars and prepare many festive meals, which is tricky for we are limited in the ingredients we are permitted to use. I mean one could almost starve to death! When I hear people complain about these things and how difficult it is to observe Pesach it frustrates me. We are so spoiled and dependent on our leavened lives. We have become enslaved to our food, our stuff, our chaos and disorder. The Seder night is freedom from all that. We sit with our families and focus on our children, explaining to them our history and all that is of real value. All too often we forget who we are and Who runs the show. Pesach comes and reminds us what our lives are all about and what our freedom is for. Families come together and invite the poor and needy. Everyone unites for one warm loving night, we know who we are, what is important and what has real value and meaning. Free to speak and tell our children that life without purpose, dedication and devotion to something bigger is not life at all. We must always remember what it is like to be enslaved and we need to talk about it so that we never lose focus of our purpose; for even the rich and noble can be slaves if they are attached to their possessions and are enslaved by their desires. I am grateful to free myself, if for only a short holiday, of all the stuff that unwittingly weighs me down. I feel connected as I sit with my family, simultaneously with millions of my people, psychologically freeing ourselves of the bonds of slavery on the very same night we did it together as a nation thousands of years ago.
