

This Memoir of Lord Wolseley, so far as it deals with his career up to the time of his proceeding to Cyprus in the summer of , was published in that year. His conduct of operations in Egypt appearing to call for a new edition, I have written a sketch of his services from that date up to the.

The Wolseleys were an ancient landed family in Wolseley , Staffordshire , whose roots can be traced back a thousand years. His paternal grandfather was Rev. Unlike other boys in his class, Wolseley was not sent to England to attend Harrow or Eton , but was instead educated at a local school in Dublin. Instead he sought a commission in the Army. Unable to afford Sandhurst or buying a commission , Wolseley wrote to the Duke of Wellington for assistance. Wellington, then the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces , promised to assist him when he turned Wolseley unsuccessfully appealed to his secretary, Lord Raglan. The British Army was then recovering from significant casualties in the latest war in South Africa , and Wolseley wrote Raglan, "I shall be prepared to start at the shortest notice, should your Lordship be pleased to appoint me to a regiment now at the seat of war. Promoted to lieutenant on 16 May and invalided home, Wolseley transferred to the 84th Regiment of Foot on 27 January , [11] and then to the 90th Light Infantry , [12] at that time stationed in Dublin , on 24 February He was selected to be an assistant engineer , and attached to the Royal Engineers during the Siege of Sevastopol. Wolseley served throughout the siege, where he was wounded at "the Quarries" on 7 June , and again in the trenches on 30 August , losing an eye. The troops were all saved, but with only their personal arms and minimal ammunition. They were taken to Singapore , and from there dispatched to Calcutta on account of the Indian Mutiny. In the autumn and winter of 1859 he took part in the Baiswara , trans- Gogra and trans- Rapti campaigns ending with the complete suppression of the rebellion. He was present at the action at Sin-ho , the capture of Tang-ku , the storming of the Taku Forts , [10] the Occupation of Tientsin , the Battle of Pa-to-cheau and the entry into Peking during which the destruction of the Chinese Imperial Old Summer Palace was begun. He was Mentioned, yet again, in Dispatches, and for his services received the medal and two clasps. On his return home he published the Narrative of the War with China in He befriended Southern sympathizers in Maryland , who found him passage into Virginia with a blockade runner across the Potomac River. There he met with the Generals Robert E. Lee , James Longstreet and Stonewall Jackson. This work appeared in the Journal of the Southern Historical Society in the same year, and is commonly cited today. Wolseley wrote, "I do not think that the fact that one-half of the small garrison of a place taken by assault was either killed or wounded evinced any very unusual bloodthirstiness on the part of the assailants. In , he successfully commanded the Red River Expedition to establish Canadian sovereignty over the Northwest Territories and Manitoba. Fort Garry now Winnipeg , the capital of Manitoba was a small centre separated from Ontario by the rocks and forests of the Canadian Shield region. The easiest route to Fort Garry that did not pass through the United States was through a network of rivers and lakes extending for six-hundred miles from Lake Superior , infrequently traversed by non- aboriginals , and where no supplies were obtainable. This campaign made him a household name in Britain. D of Cambridge universities. On his return home he was appointed inspector-general of auxiliary forces with effect from 1 April ; [30] however, in consequence of the indigenous unrest in Natal , he was sent to that colony as governor and general-commanding on 24 February But on arrival in July, he found that the war in Zululand was practically over, [25] and, after effecting a temporary settlement, he went on to the Transvaal. He was promoted to brevet general while serving in South Africa on 4 June For his services there, he received two clasps to his Egyptian medal, the thanks of Parliament, [15] and on 28 September was created Viscount Wolseley, of Wolseley in the County of Stafford, [45] [46] and a Knight of the Order of St Patrick. The fiasco now called Black Week culminated in his dismissal over Christmastide Upon being released from responsibilities he brought the whole subject before the House of Lords in a speech. Published in the American Humor Magazine "Puck" approx. He gave evidence to a parliamentary commission that the construction might be "calamitous for England", he added that "No matter what fortifications and defences were built, there would always be the peril of some continental army seizing the tunnel exit by surprise. For a combination of reasons over years
