She should have never believed that she would get her happy ending. She set herself up to get disappointed, again. Hello there my fellow OUAT fans! After the season finale on Sunday I had too many emotions to deal with, and this story is what came from it. This story is just a short little one-shot picking up where the finale left off. Constructive criticism and reviews are loved. She all but ran down the sidewalk to put some distance between herself and everyone else in the god-forsaken town. The town that she had created. Regina tried her damndest to keep her tears locked in her eyes, but it was hardly worth the effort. The realization of never being happy was too much. It was too hard. Once again, she had lost everything. Why was she even surprised? Did she honestly believe that she was going to live happily ever after? She was the Evil Queen. No matter how much she tried to change, no matter how much she really did change, no one cared. It barely made a difference. For the past few weeks, she really thought her life was turning around. She defeated Zelena with good magic, she found someone to truly love her, and she made Henry proud. For the first time in years, Regina had felt her heart lighten and a burden disappear from her shoulders. Then, it was all taken from her in the blink of an eye. As the tears slipped down her cheeks, Regina swore she could feel her heart crumbling. Is this how it felt when she ripped the hearts from her victims and squeezed them until they turned to dust? For just a moment, she considered ripping her own heart out and squeezing it until there was no more. That would be easier. It would stop the pain for the first time in her entire life. The moment she considered the idea, she quickly changed her mind. No, this pain was what she deserved. Her destiny was to suffer; after all, she had cursed and killed so many. The whole situation was her own stupid fault. Every time she opened herself to love, she got hurt. Every single time, it was ripped away from her. Daniel loved her, and what did that get him? Her father had loved her, and what did she do? The irony that she was once again alone and heartbroken while Snow White was surrounded with those whom she loved was not lost. She collapsed into the first bench she saw and wrapped her arms around herself, shaking with sobs. Once again, Regina was unwanted and alone. Once again, Regina was broken. Once again, Regina felt the familiar swell of hatred and anger darkening her heart. She could barely manage to gasp a few breaths between the sobs that forced their way out of her chest. The thought of unwrapping her arms from herself scared Regina, because she was almost positive she would shatter like a piece of discarded glass. Regina felt his weight on the bench beside her as he sat down. God, she just wanted him to go away. His smell infiltrated her senses and her heart gave a painful clench, making her think back to all of the intimate moments they had spent together. A warm, calloused, hand rested gently on her shoulder and Regina jerked away quickly. Her head whipped up to shoot him the cruelest glare she could muster with the tears blurring her vision and make-up running down her cheeks. Despite having many years of practice at being the evilest of them all, at this moment Regina felt the weakest and the most powerless she ever had. His hand fidgeted as he weighed the pros and cons of reaching out to her again. He decided not to, instead just letting her name slip from his lips, "Regina," "Go back to your family! She nearly leaped off of the bench, turning on her heel as she moved to flee from the situation. His hand caught her wrist and stopped her in her tracks, forcing her to turn and look at him. As their eyes met, she thought about burying herself in his embrace and throwing a fireball at his face all at the same time. She should have known it would never happen. How could she compete with the mother of his child? The first woman he truly loved? The woman he would have walked through hell to get back? Especially when she was the reason that woman was supposed to be dead. She hated herself even more for grasping so pathetically to that tiny shred of hope. What was wrong with her? Too bad her wishes never came true. In that moment, Regina Mills felt something she had never felt in her entire life. It was as if her realization triggered something inside of her that finally decided that it was time to give up. She felt all of her emotion simply drain away. Her anger and hatred seemed to evaporate into oblivion as a strange feeling of nothingness took over. Her sadness and heartache simply disappeared. Inside, she felt like there was a huge void. It was worse than when her heart had been stolen; even then, she could feel. Now, there was nothing. The tears pooled in her eyes, but they did not fall. For protecting someone innocent? Her arm fell limply to her side and Regina took a small step backward. I never saw you as evil, just broken and on the mend. I believed in you and I wanted you to believe in yourself. But now," His voice faltered and Regina briefly wondered why he was so emotional over her, but she refused to look at his face. He kept speaking regardless, "Now I see you for what you are. Marian told me everything that you did to her but I still wanted to see you again. I did love you. Her thirst for vengeance had always been her way of defending herself from the pain. Anger was safe, anger was controllable. Heartbreak and sadness were not. It was just easier to be angry than it was to be sad. But, right now, she had no quest for vengeance. Robin Hood stared at her for another moment, and then took a step away. It never misses its target. Regina stood there in the dark for a few moments before turning and quietly walking towards her big, lonely, mansion. Regina was the villain. Regina was always the bad guy. Regina ruined so, so many lives. It was only fair that she got cheated out of her happiness every single time. If anyone would like to read it, I would love to write it. Your review has been posted.

On them, I am an expert. The very same romantic ideal – a yearning for love which culminates in happy ending- spans the spectrum of collective storytelling from Grimm Brothers to Walt Disney to Sex and the City. Who we become as adults, is largely influenced by the stories we were told. Though we teach young boys and girls to believe in happy endings, the question remains: What does the fairytale stand for? What can we learn from it? The Fairy Grandmother Cinderella: Even miracles take a little time. A Postmodern Fixation or Reality? The bride, the cake, the Household Cavalry and the Duke, made the whole world stop in a breathless moment. The Royal wedding turned into a public holiday, a global celebration of romantic love. Sometimes, the real life writes the best copy. However, romantic expectations of a contemporary woman who once-upon-a-time was a young girl dreaming of a knight in shining armor, not always end up in happy ending. Young Fiona in Shrek, the musical, ironically says: From a feminist criticism of the gender stereotype to a traditional interpretation of a moral virtue, what is it we can make of the magical storytelling? Lesson in Faith or Reality Invented? Fairytales aim to project a vision of a better world. But what happens when life throws you a curve ball? What happens when great expectations turn out not to be so great? Exposing children to fairytales in which the cruel and frightening scenes are edited or omitted would mean exposing them to only one side of reality. In no success story, even the most fairylike, from Steve Jobs to Novak Djokovic, did the hero manage to escape dealing with obstacles on his way from rags-to-riches. Challenges the hero is exposed to offer a toolkit for riding the wave of life. Fairytales offer ways of resolving a stranglehold situation that at times may seem insurmountable and can inspire child to look beyond the limiting circumstances. Faith, that everything is possible. So take your chances. Become a hero of your own narrative. Maybe life is a fairytale, after all.

Being single gives you a wonderful opportunity to figure out what truly makes you happy and gives you the perfect chance to get to know yourself better. Being single grants you the time and freedom to do whatever you want on your own schedule and allows you to put your needs, desires, and ambitions above all others. You need to be able to be happy alone first, and love yourself in order to give your love to someone else and have a successful relationship. Do some soul searching. Figure out what truly makes you happy and gives you the perfect chance to get to know yourself better. You need to know and experience what real love and happiness is like by yourself before you commit to loving someone else. It might be scary at first but here are some ideas that can help you to feel more positive about being alone. Get to know yourself by spending some time alone in solitude. Do something that will help you relax and focus on your mind, body and soul. Write down new places you would like to explore, games you would like to learn how to play, or books you would like to read. Once you start making this list, you will look forward to trying these new things and you will start to get excited about the possibilities available to you. Sometimes all it takes to feel refreshed and happy is to change something simple out of your daily routine. Give yourself a fresh start. By changing something in your surroundings, it will help you start fresh and prevent you from feeling like your life is stagnant. You can also look at moving, rearranging or redecorating your house to create an instant fresh start or renewal of your current stage in life. Plan a cleaning or de-cluttering session.

GallifreyanDemigoddess "The love I felt for Jefferson was the kind of love that was worth fighting for. The kind of love that makes you stupid and makes every single part of you happy" she said. Will they be happy? This story is quite different. It was neither True Love nor Soul Mates things. I was always traveling, always moving on. I never knew my parents, or any other relative, so I only had myself. And that was okay for me. I moved around the realms, never staying in one for more than a couple of days. I stole things for a living, worked for powerful wizards and witches, learning from them and doing their dirty works And guess what happened? I fell in love. But it was the best that had happened to me. What I felt for him was love. There was no doubt about it. It was that kind of love you have for a person that the only thing you want to do is kill them, but at the same time, kiss the living hell out of them. It was the kind of love that makes you blind, and deaf, and jealous, and stupid, and angry, and happy, and sad, and joyous and confused. And of course, I hated it. At first, like any other teenager could think, I said the only thing I felt for him was hate. He was only an annoying bastard that annoyed me with his his whole existence. He was a grown up man, he was older than me by a couple of years, he even had a daughter! So handsome it should be a crime, and he was charming when he wanted to, and funny He was the man any girl could want. Or so I thought. Rumple always loved to see us fighting, he confessed to me that he could practically see us making out passionately after our fights It was thanks to Rumple that I realized I loved Jefferson. And when I did, there was no turning back. The moment I accepted I loved him was the moment everything changed. We actually were happy, for a couple of years we had everything we wanted. I finally had a family, I had Jefferson and I had Grace, his daughter. And I was happy. For the first time in my life I felt what real happiness was. One afternoon she came to our little house searching for him, begging him to help her. I worked with Rumplestilskin enough time to know about some nasty curses, and mine, I was sure was the worst one you could give a lonely empty hearted girl. The Evil Queen wanted a happy ending? Not here, nor in the stupid Land without Magic. After a while, I accepted that destiny had played again with me. I settled down with Grace, and I tried to be a mother for her. There, I was separated yet again from the person I currently loved. Grace was sorted into a loving family that consisted from a mother and a father, and I was sorted out as her sister. We were together, but not in the way we were before. But I managed to overcome it. There on StoryBroke life could be dull, but it was kind of good, too. There was just so much calmness I had a new life, a new name and a new family. I had a chance to start over as "Melanie Grace". I remembered my life before the Curse. I remembered Jefferson and our terrible "love story". And that was the worst curse one could have. Your review has been posted.

Your pet may not be living up to his or her potential! If you or someone you know or love suffers from anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder PTSD , bipolar disorder or another issue, then you no longer have to suffer from these emotional issues alone anymore. You may qualify to have your dog become an official ESA! Dogs provide us with a great deal of emotional support, comfort, compassion and unconditional love. In fact, research and studies published by ScienceDirect show that oxytocin OT plays an important role in social bonding in both animals and humans. Studies have also shown that OT levels drastically increase while stress and anxiety simultaneously decrease when humans and animals are around one another. Furthermore, anxiety, extreme stress, depression and PTSD involve significant emotional turmoil and distress, which can cause a vicious cycle as well as lead to other health problems. However, dogs can help break this cycle once and for all. Formal research has proven time and time again that dogs can help reduce anxiety and stress levels, treat depression, and improve overall health. Therefore, many pet owners learn to rely and depend on their dogs for emotional support and comfort, and get their dogs to become official ESA dogs. Your happiness, well-being, and overall health decrease because your stress and anxiety levels increase. And the same goes for your dog! So, why live life without your best friend? So, allow him or her to live up to their full potential by getting your dog to become your best form of therapy. With an official ESA letter, your dog can be! Most people have no control over their emotional well-being. They feel ecstatic when good stuff happens and depressed when things go wrong. Their lives are roller coaster rides: But what if you could be happy no matter what happens? If being in command of your emotional state sounds good, take charge of your life with these 5 easy tips. Stop Chasing and Start Living Many people feel they need something â€” more money, new clothes, better relationships â€” to make them happy. Instead of enjoying life, they chase a vague idea of happiness. Today your car breaks down; tomorrow you pull your calf muscle. So stop chasing; start living. Assume Responsibility We often blame other people, circumstances and even objects for our problems. Never sulk and try not to feel sorry for yourself too often. Stop Seeking Stimulation We live in a world of endless stimulation. Sometimes, this makes us feel bored and restless when we run out of stuff to do. If you want to be happy, overcome this addiction. Develop the ability to enjoy life in its entirety â€” even when the stimulation stops. Appreciate the sky you see on your way to work each day. Cherish each moment you spend with the people you love. Savor every bite of food you get to eat. Enjoying every experience will give you many new reasons to be happy. Take Action Taking action is the logical consequence of assuming responsibility for your life Point 2. When you want to lose weight â€” start jogging. Tell them to stop. Get behind the steering wheel of your own life! This site has plenty of advice that will help you take action the smart way. Educate yourself and commit to find happiness no matter what it takes. With enough hard work and dedication, you really can create the life you want. Expect Nothing We expect others to treat us better than we treat them. We want to live like rockstars, ignoring the fact that only a few people reach that level of success. In short, we tend to have unreasonable expectations. The difference between what we feel entitled to and what we actually get is the source of much misery. Accept life in its entirety; stop thinking in terms of what should be and accept what is. When you live without entitlement, every good thing becomes a wonderful surprise. Even better, expecting nothing means never being disappointed. Conclusion At the end of the day, bad things will happen to you. You will have highs, lows and lots of mediums in your life. Erin shows overscheduled, overwhelmed women how to do less so that they can achieve more. Traditional productivity booksâ€”written by menâ€”barely touch the tangle of cultural pressures that women feel when facing down a to-do list.

Chapter 9 : Fairytales and Happy Endings

The truth about life is that happily ever after is not that you won't have any problems or troubles in life, but happily ever after is all about being happy despite of all those troubles and problems.
