Pisces men may never seem entirely at ease as a result of these pulling forces. The Pisces man is intuitive to the extreme and possesses superb intuitions. He is quick to take on the problems of others and has a hard time saying no, even when he should. Not quick to judge nor judging on outward appearances, Pisces looks into the soul of a person to see who he or she truly is. A Pisces man is warm hearted, caring, and deeply sensitive. He is a true charmer, full of charisma. The Pisces man is a true romantic in every sense of the word. Pisces men are often unsuccessful in career ambitions as they look for the easy way to do things, not realizing there is no easy way. The Pisces man is loyal, romantic, generous, compassionate, kind, and sensitive. Love with a Pisces man will result in him giving freely of his time, energy, and emotions to love and please you. He has a hard time maintaining a relationship with one woman. He tends to choose women who are not suited for him resulting in turbulence and chaos in his love life. He falls in love easily but his perception of what he needs and wants in a relationship change; sometimes quickly and without warning. One of my greatest fears was never finding true love and end up in an unfulfilling relationship or even worse end up alone. Relationship expert Kara Oh managed to allay many of the fears I had about men in her internet bestseller called Men Made Easy. It is one of the most talked about and most successful of all her books because it has helped so many women find what they want in men. Powerfully emotional, intuitive, creative and caring, the Pisces man is sensitive and often your most trusted friend. Often exceptionally attractive, his most endearing traits are his humility and love of romance. Spiritual, mysterious, imaginative and idealistic this man is one of the dreamers of the zodiac. He senses and feels things which other less sensitive folk miss, making him perhaps seem a little psychic at times. This can be applied in many directions, for example he may be a natural emotional healer, creative artist or astute businessman. The symbol for Pisces is two fish moving in opposite directions, which represents the conflicting desires of flesh and spirit. This is a battle of self indulgence versus self denial, and balancing these two forces is no easy task. Some Pisceans are attracted to drama, art, creativity or fantasy in an attempt to escape from the gritty reality and frequent disappointments of life. The Pisces man often is of the view that the best route to finding inner peace is to give to others, and in many respects this is the most generous and selfless sign. Highly sympathetic, compassionate, self-sacrificing, intuitive and unassuming, he may absorb emotions from the environment around him, often becoming happy or depressed based on the mood of others. As such he may do far better when with optimists than pessimists. He tends to give a piece of himself to anyone he loves, and gets a lot of satisfaction from helping and serving others. He is more likely to think with his heart than his head, tending to dislike confrontation or hurting others in any way, and often having difficulty saying no, or leaving bad situations or relationships. The net result of these traits is sadly that the Pisces man is easily taken advantage of and manipulated by the uncaring, which can create a vicious cycle of lowered self worth and increased need for approval typically from the very people who are bad for him. For this reason although he typically makes an attractive lover to most other signs, he is compatible with relatively few. One of Pisces greatest life lessons is to learn to be a little selfish, in order to better choose who deserves their help and love. In this way they can transform from a martyr to the strong, to a savior of the weak. The Pisces man is difficult to pin down, most of his true feelings are hidden. He is attracted to anything stress free and without a competitive edge because he hates restriction but on the other hand, he is also attracted to things that stir his emotions, including women. Pisces man is notorious for choosing the wrong woman, he tends to be unlucky in love and have dating relationships full of peril. When confronted with complicated issues, he tends to retreat into his dream world and wears his "rose colored glasses". This is why Pisces man can be very temperamental and pretend there is nothing wrong when your relationship is on rocky ground. When life is not going so well, he can be very hard on himself and very self destructive so it is better for him to live in denial. The Pisces male needs a firm, strong woman to guide him because he is very indecisive and is known for sitting on the fence. The woman has to take the lead in the dating relationship. If you like drama in your dating relationship, the Pisces man is for you. Your ultimate goal will be to be invited into the secret realm of his life, where he experiences things and plans ideas that no one on the outside will ever know about. He will protect you and cherish you and you will have a fulfilling romantic partner because he has an amazing ability for love. This is the ultimate goal in a long term relationship and this is very difficult to achieve. It takes the right amount of patience, tolerance and acceptance. Also you have to show your man kindness and sympathy because as the sign of self-undoing, he is very hard on himself and sometimes lacks motivation. The Pisces man is full of a complex and contradictory charm that surprises, baffles, seduces and irritates at the same time. His eyes pass through you without seeing you, giving him a mysterious and far-off look. The Pisces man seems to be living in a parallel world and the details of the day-to-day life bore him. If the Pisces man has a dilemma, he finds it hard to decide because of his impression that all the options are correct and wrong at the same time. One of the keys to his behaviour is the fact that, to the Pisces man, everything is relative. He has an original relation to the material sphere, especially to money: His value scale is completely different from that of the ordinary people. Trying to define and establish a pattern for the Pisces man is meaningless. Because of the strong sensorial impact on the Pisces man, love has an important place in his life and he lives it in its sublime form, experiencing the mystic love, or in its most debasing and abject form. Love can be the pandemonium or the heaven of his life. Deep in his soul, the Pisces man carries an ocean of feelings. An ocean, because his love seems not to know any limits, qualitatively or quantitatively. In his youth, the Pisces man is not aware that through his love he is in fact trying to meet heaven, he is searching for God. However, eventually this secret reveals to him and it is not a wonder that this sign gives so many mystics to the world. The Pisces man is the dreamiest man alive! These men are highly spiritual in one way or another and can also be quite eccentric. So finding such a man is quite refreshing, and a little spooky too it has to be said! The Pisces man will know how to touch you and make you feel like your floating on a cloud. Eroticism is a part of the Pisces mans personality and therefore fantasies and love making is a way for him to express himself fully. I have had one relationship with a Pisces male. I think it was the mood swings. Obviously someone more compatible would be able to deal with these things and possibly love him for them. But they drove me insane! It was quite nice that we both cried at sad bits in films though!! Just not perhaps the Gemini girls. And it is nice to be able to have someone who you can sit with and talk with for hours about your inner most feelings. Being a very feminine sign can cause some issues with these men. They are feminine in the way that they can express emotion and their power to feel and be intuitive, but a lot of them are quite masculine as well, on the outside. But I feel you can tell a Pisces man because of this feminine streak. Or on a builders site wearing a hard hat and covered in dirt. No, these men are a not at all like that. This is where the depression can come from and angst. They are trying to run away from themselves. Due to this weaker side in say half the Pisces men, they tend to go for women who are much stronger than themselves. And this will only lead to disappointment in the end. What this man needs is a soul mate, someone who he can become united with both physically and mentally. Diposting oleh Bintoro Halim di.

Before we met Bill Barhydt, founder and CEO of the cryptocurrency-exchange app Abra, we also felt like we had very little reason to care about Bitcoin. But Abra—which is part user-friendly investing app, part Venmo for crypto—was initially created to allow people to use Bitcoin to easily and cheaply send money across borders. In the last year, Abra has expanded its investing services, too, in a way that fully leverages blockchain technology. A cryptocurrency is digital money, which means it can be stored on your computer or phone and sent person-to-person with no bank or intermediary. Bitcoin is the first cryptocurrency. A public key is like an email address; you can give anyone the address and they can send Bitcoin to that address. The private key functions like your email password. It protects access to your Bitcoin and should be carefully guarded and protected.

Q Where does Bitcoin come from and how is it created? Where can you get it? A Bitcoin is created via a process known as mining. Mining for Bitcoin is the digital equivalent of digging for gold. The amount of Bitcoin that miners can win decreases over time. This means that Bitcoin is a deflationary currency, like gold, which has created a hoarding situation that many economists predicted. This hoarding process creates a feedback loop: As Bitcoin becomes more valuable and more scarce, more people are motivated to hoard it, which increases the value, which leads to more hoarding and drives the price up more. Miners also decide which transactions get accepted by the Bitcoin network. Users pay miners a small fee for accepting their transaction when they want to send money using the Bitcoin network. This is akin to paying a fee to your bank when you wire money. Miners generally take the transactions with the highest fees first since Bitcoin can process only about 25 transactions per hour. Soon, this will grow to millions of transactions per hour. Lastly, lots of people maintain copies of the Bitcoin network, called nodes. Nodes ensure that everything runs correctly and that miners do their jobs according to the rules of the system: They run a sophisticated type of ledger called a blockchain that maintains a copy of every single Bitcoin transaction ever executed.

Q How does cryptocurrency have value? How can you trust that it will have value in the future as opposed to fiat money? A Ultimately, anything has value because people agree that it has value. Government-issued money, such as the US dollar, has value because we all agree that it does, mostly because our government accepts payments of tax debts only in its own money. Generally an asset such as cryptocurrency or baseball cards or gold has value for a few potential reasons—although not all have to be true at once: People want to hold an asset to store value or as an investment. People think the asset is generally scarce with a reasonable assurance that it will remain scarce or no one can artificially create lots more of it. People hold an asset if it serves some useful function either as money, a commodity, or a tradable good. Bitcoin, specifically, has value for a few different reasons: The same economic incentives that drive people to dig up gold or drill for oil are at work: People are willing to dedicate time and resources to create new Bitcoins. Bitcoin is the first and most dominant cryptocurrency. There are many alternatives, but people continue to use it because it remains the most widely adopted and secure network. There will only ever be 21 million Bitcoins produced. Comparatively, modern fiat currency is a product of monetary policy that is controlled by central banks.

Q What is a blockchain and how does it work? Every time you want to deposit or withdraw money to or from the checkbook you have to call at least 51 percent of the people with a copy of the checkbook and get them to agree that the transaction is valid—majority rules. Why would you want to have a copy of every transaction in every checkbook? Of course, Bitcoin does this in a more efficient manner than the global checkbook analogy, but the idea is still the same. More importantly, the Bitcoin blockchain is a new way of organizing data. It is a structure that builds on itself. Once a block is completed it is linked to the next block, forming a chain of linkable information. Through solving the problem of trust on the internet, blockchain enables new kinds of economic activity based on the coins created to incentivize its management.

Q What are other cryptocurrencies worth knowing about? A There are thousands of cryptocurrencies, and more are being developed and launched every day. Some cryptocurrencies are versions of the Bitcoin blockchain that are trying to solve for other issues. Litecoin, for example, is designed to enable faster and cheaper transactions, while a coin like Dash is designed with additional privacy in mind. Then there are other cryptocurrencies that are building completely new infrastructures. Ethereum is the second most popular cryptocurrency in terms of network value. There are a lot of ways to measure value, but cryptocurrency systems are valuable in part because they are open and distributed networks. And Ethereum is designed as a platform to run decentralized applications and smart contracts, and it is used to create new tokens that are distributed via initial coin offerings ICOs or token sales. We believe that eventually Bitcoin will be used to solve big global problems. I can think of three tangible examples. The first is payments and money transfer for remittances. Fees for these transactions can be as high as 15 percent and average around 10 percent. Bitcoin can eventually eliminate these fees. The second example is enabling new types of investing. Bitcoin can enable smart contracts that can be used simulate very simple derivatives, which can give investors exposure to US stocks in foreign countries. Or it can give US investors exposure to foreign stocks without having to find a broker to actually sell the stock. Lastly, we believe Bitcoin technology will be used to enable people in developing markets to lease home electronics such as washing machines, refrigerators, televisions, etc. The buyer will simply forward a small amount of Bitcoin every week to the wallet of the seller and this will enable the appliance to function. This is not easily possible with traditional government money, and it is a powerful possibility. Q How should a newcomer approach investing in cryptocurrency? A The first investment that a newcomer to the crypto space should make is time. The information landscape in crypto is getting a little easier to navigate, and people are putting a lot of time and energy into trying to make cryptocurrency more accessible. Q How are the rules of conventional investing and the rules of investing in cryptocurrency similar? How are they different? A The fundamentals are the same. The goal is to try to find something that will grow in value. With traditional markets, investors need to spend time figuring out how things are moving and be ready to take advantage of opportunities. On a daily basis, crypto markets can be more volatile than traditional markets, but the trend, over time, is that they are increasing in value. Cryptocurrencies are more like commodities than equity or bonds. Commodities, like gold or oil, do not derive value from any form of cash flow but rather from some intrinsic value. Bitcoin is generally viewed the same way, but will also likely eventually be viewed as a better form of money. This promise of Bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies to solve huge problemsâ€”as a better form of moneyâ€”is driving significant speculative value in these cryptocurrencies as investments. Q Are there common mistakes or misconceptions you see in this investment space? A There is a massive misconception that crypto is shady. But now we are moving from a phase where cryptocurrencies were a very niche, technical topic to a phase of more mainstream adoption and use. Recently, several of the largest university endowments in the US announced that they had invested in cryptocurrencies, too. The irony of all of this is that it is all unfolding in exactly the same way that the internet itself evolved in the mid and late s, when many people believed that it was all about gambling and pornography. Q How does the Abra app work? A Abra is an app that allows users to invest in thirty different cryptocurrencies, including Bitcoin, Ether, and fifty world currencies such as US dollars, euros, Chinese yuan, etc. We are a cryptocurrency wallet that lives on the Bitcoin blockchain, which means that it is really secure. In the background, we use a novel synthetic currency technology to peg values to whatever asset our investors want to hold. This allows people to move between multiple assets quickly and cheaply, opening up a world of investment opportunities. Q Can you explain the international function of Abra? How is it possible? A We started Abra in as an app that would allow people to use Bitcoin to easily and cheaply send money across borders. Remittances, or money that is sent home by workers earning a living in other countries, are a huge part of the global economy. Using traditional systems, sending that money is still complicated, and it takes a lot of time and resources to move it across borders. Abra is available around the world; we have users in more than seventy-five countries. They exist as computer code, and so they are inherently global. While Bitcoin and cryptocurrencies are interesting and novel in the context of developed economies, they are way more critical and important in developing economies where access to banking and financial services is challenging or where monetary or governmental policies make it hard for people to save and invest using traditional markets. Q Do you see a gender imbalance in the cryptocurrency space? Why do you think that is?
