I looked up swamp deer on Wikipedia. They really do exist. When Emily and Grady decide to explore the swamp a little Grady in shorts and sandals - moron move right there they discover a small, crud This was interesting. When Emily and Grady decide to explore the swamp a little Grady in shorts and sandals - moron move right there they discover a small, crude wooden shack. And there is a swamp hermit living in the shack! Emily and Grady flee instead of introducing themselves. Grady makes two friends about his age - Will and Cassie. Cassie is convinced that the swamp hermit is a werewolf. A hundred years ago, everyone who had been in the swamp developed a horrible fever that killed most of them. Grady promptly comes down with a fever the next day. He starts hearing howling from the swamp every night. Other nights he and his sister hear scratching at the door. A few days later a gigantic pound dog appears. He has very blue eyes. Grady convinces his parents to keep the dog, which he names Wolf. Then animals start getting brutally killed Emily and the parents suspect Wolf is the one killing all the animals. Ed Warner, a neighbor, goes into the swamp to hunt turkey and never returns. Cassie is convinced the swamp hermit is the werewolf and he killed the animals and Mr. Grady gets bitten by a snake. Grady chases the dog off in order to save it. At night he sneaks out and discovers Will is the werewolf. Will is going to kill Grady, but Wolf saves him and kills Will. All in all, this was more of a mystery than a straight-out horror, in my opinion. Who is the werewolf? Is there even a werewolf? What or who is killing the animals? I really like the hot, humid, swampy atmosphere he cooks up. That was well done. I liked the ending. It was a good ending. I was happy with it.

The Werewolf of Fever Swamp was probably the episode I watched the most! Sadly, the DVD is very disappointing. There are no special features, no menus, no subtitles or even captions, and no Goosebumps theme song in the beginning.

A week later, I heard the frightening howls in the swamp for the first time. Night after night, the howls made me sit up in bed. I would hold my breath and wrap my arms around myself to keep from shivering. I would stare out my bedroom window at the chalk-colored full moon. And I would listen. What kind of creature makes such a cry? I would ask myself. And how close is it? The wails rose and fell like police car sirens. They sounded to me like a warning. Stay out of the swamp. You do not belong here. I stood in the back yard with the binoculars my dad had given me for my twelfth birthday and gazed toward the swamp. Trees with slender, white trunks tilted over each other. Their flat, broad leaves appeared to form a roof, covering the swamp floor in blue shadow. Behind me, the deer paced uneasily in their wire-mesh pen. I could hear them pawing the soft, sandy ground, rubbing their antlers against the walls of their pen. Lowering my binoculars, I turned to look at them. The deer were the reason we had moved to Florida. You see, my dad, Michael F. Tucker, is a scientist. He works for the University of Vermont in Burlington, which, believe me, is a long way from the Florida swamps! Dad got these six deer from some country in South America. For one thing, their fur is very red, not brown. And their hooves are really big and kind of webbed. For walking on wet, swampy ground, I guess. Dad wants to see if these South American swamp deer can survive in Florida. He plans to put little radio transmitters on them, and set them free in the swamp. When he told us back in Burlington that we were moving to Florida because of the deer, we all totally freaked. My sister, Emily, cried for days. But Dad quickly got Mom on his side. Mom is a scientist, too. She and Dad work together on a lot of projects. So, of course, she agreed with him. And the two of them tried to persuade Emily and me that this was the chance of a lifetime, that it was going to be really exciting. So here we were, living in a little white house in a neighborhood of four or five other little white houses. We had six weird-looking red deer penned up behind the house. The hot Florida sun was beaming down. And an endless swamp stretched beyond our flat, grassy back yard. I turned away from the deer and raised the binoculars to my face. I pulled the binoculars away and squinted toward the swamp. In the near distance I saw a large white bird on two long, spindly legs. She was wearing a sleeveless white T-shirt and short red denim shorts. My sister is tall and thin and very blonde. She looks a lot like a crane. The bird turned and began high-stepping toward the swamp. Emily had been spending most of her time waiting for the mail. She hated when I teased her about Martin, her boyfriend back in Burlington. So I teased her as often as I could. She reached out with both hands and messed up my hair. She knows I hate to have my hair messed up. Just a short walk. We turned to see him inside the deer pen. He had a clipboard in one hand and was going from deer to deer, taking notes. More interesting than standing around in the heat arguing with him. They kept slipping down her nose. I was really excited. Emily reluctantly followed, a fretful expression on her face. My shadow slanting behind me, I hurried toward the low, tilting trees. The air felt sticky against my face. The broad palm leaves were so low, I could almost reach up and touch them. They nearly blocked out the sun, but shafts of yellow light broke through, beaming down on the swamp floor like spotlights. Scratchy weeds and fern leaves brushed against my bare legs. I kept close to my sister as we made our way along a narrow, winding trail. The binoculars, strapped around my neck, began to feel heavy against my chest. The most surprising thing about the swamp was all the sounds. A bird trilled from somewhere above. Another bird replied with a shrill whistle. Insects chattered loudly all around us. I heard a steady tap-tap-tap, like someone hammering on wood. Palm leaves crackled as they swayed. Slender tree trunks creaked. My sandals made thup thup sounds, sinking into the marshy ground as I walked. She pulled off her dark glasses to see better. We had come to a small, oval-shaped pond. The water was dark green, half-hidden in shade. Floating on top were white water lilies, bending gracefully over flat, green lily pads. Look at the great light. The near end of the pond was darkened by long shadows. But light slanted down through the trees at the other end, forming what looked like a bright curtain that spilled into the still pond water. I was more interested in wildlife. I let Emily admire the pond and the water lilies a little longer. Then I headed around the pond and deeper into the swamp. My sandals slapped over the wet ground. Up ahead, a swarm of tiny gnats, thousands of them, danced silently in a shaft of sunlight. It makes me itchy just to look at them. We turned away—and both saw something scamper behind a fallen, moss-covered log. It was just some kind of lizard. She scratched her arms some more. I really want to get back. I heard the tap-tap-tap again, directly overhead. The low palm leaves scraped against each other, shifting in a soft, wet breeze. The shrill clattering of the insects grew louder. I ignored her and kept walking. I knew she was bluffing. My sandals crackled over dried, brown palm leaves. Without turning around, I could hear Emily a few steps behind me. Another little lizard scampered across the path, just in front of my sandals. It looked like a dark arrow, shooting into the underbrush.

Chapter 3 : Editions of The Werewolf of Fever Swamp by R.L. Stine

The Werewolf of Fever Swamp is the fourteenth book in the original Goosebumps book series. It was first published in 1982. The cover illustration features a wolf howling at night in a green fogging swamp while next to a torn shirt and a cap.

The Tucker family has recently moved to Florida, and they start noticing numerous odd occurrences happening at night, such as dead animals appearing in their yard and strange creatures lurking at the edge of the swamp. The book includes a small cast of characters who are close to the swamp. Tucker, is convinced that deer are able to live in Florida. He moves the family from Vermont to Florida, where he raises deer in a pen and eventually plans to release them into the wild. Tucker, is also a scientist and helps him with his research. The Tucker parents are supporting characters who are just as confused by the mysterious nightly events around their home as their children. It is their children who ultimately get to the bottom of the mystery. Grady and Emily Tucker Grady Tucker is 12 years old, and serves as the hero of the book. His sister, Emily, is 16 and is only a supporting character. Grady is at the center of the action, investigating the strange animal sightings and killings around the swamp. Grady is attacked by the werewolf, and at the end of the book, the plot reveals that he has been turned into a werewolf. Will and Cassie Will and Cassie are both neighbors to the Tucker family, though they are not related. Will tells Grady that Cassie is a "weird" girl. Cassie is the one to first suggest that the animal killings are caused by a werewolf. By the end of the book, Grady discovers that Will is the werewolf after watching him transition in the swamp. Will is the werewolf who attacks Grady. Wolf and the Swamp Hermit Two other mysterious figures appear in the book: Wolf, a pound dog who shows up one night and is adopted by the Tucker family, and the Swamp Hermit, a man who lives in the swamp and is believed to be crazy. The Swamp Hermit chases Grady and Emily when he sees them in the swamp near the beginning of the book, and the children suspect him of being the werewolf. When Grady fights with Will, who is in werewolf form, the dog jumps in to fight Will and protect Grady. He ends up pushing Will into the swamp, where he drowns. After Grady becomes a werewolf, he enjoys running through the swamp at night with Wolf, the dog, as his companion. Chapter 4 : The Werewolf Of Fever Swamp

"The Werewolf of Fever Swamp" is the 18th and 19th episode of season one of the Goosebumps TV series. Part one and two premiered on May 17, on Fox Kids Network respectively. Part one and two premiered on May 17, on Fox Kids Network respectively.

Plot[edit] Grady Tucker and his family have moved to Florida into a house next to Fever Swamp because his father, a scientist, wants to determine if swamp deer from South America can survive in Florida. Grady and his sister Emily get lost while exploring the swamp and meet a swamp hermit who lives in a shack. As the hermit chases after them, they run away ultimately making their way back home. A few days later, as Grady is going outside to meet Will Blake, one of his new friends, a big stray dog jumps onto Grady. Grady thinks the dog resembles more a wolf than a dog and decides to call the dog Wolf. One morning, Will tells him that a neighbor, Ed Warner, went missing after hunting in the swamp. After going out to investigate some howling, Grady finds a hole that had been ripped from the deer pen and a murdered deer laying on one side. He plans on taking Wolf to the pound, but Grady is convinced that a werewolf killed the deer and other animals in town, and he helps the dog flee before his dad can capture Wolf. That night, Grady hears howling and observes Wolf slowly moving towards the swamp shortly afterward. As Grady follows the dog he runs into Will, who says he heard the howls and decided to investigate them. While they are following Wolf, Grady gets separated from both Will and the dog. Worried that the swamp hermit is a werewolf, he starts to flee before he is attacked by Will, who is revealed to be a werewolf. Wolf reappears and fights off Will before Grady passes out. When Grady regains consciousness, he learns from his mother that the swamp hermit found him and carried him home. His parents also let Grady keep Wolf after discovering that the dog saved his life. During the next full moon, Grady now a werewolf and his dog go out to hunt. Release and reception[edit] The Werewolf of Fever Swamp was first published in December by Scholastic , and reissued in October under the Classic Goosebumps rename. Coming of Age in Fantasyland, described the book as a story of victimization. Frost felt The Werewolf of Fever Swamp was one of the best werewolf novels in the series, stating it "heightens the suspense by concealing the identity of the werewolf until the very end. Hutmacher from Kaboose described it as "a suspenseful well-crafted mystery. Creepy Creatures Gabriel Hernandez adapted the book into a comic book story in Creepy Creatures , published on September 1, as the first book in the Goosebumps Graphix series.
