Hair should be clean and free of products before cutting. If the style is layered, the hair should be trimmed one layer at a time to protect the integrity of the style. Cut and Color Techniques If your hair will be colored during the same appointment, it is likely that the stylist will dye the hair first. This allows the color to set, and any uneven spots near the ends will be trimmed away. This is a convenient approach because the hair is usually wet during cutting, and color is applied to dry hair. The approach the hairstylist uses depends on personal preference. Sometimes, hair color is applied to highlight certain features of the hairstyle. It is easier to apply the color after cutting so the stylist can target areas that enhance the haircut. Some hair stylists choose to color after cutting the, especially if the salon charges for color service according to hair length. It may benefit the customer to have the haircut first if a significant amount of hair is going to wind up on the floor. Short styles should be trimmed more frequently because growth is more noticeable. Generally, short hair should be trimmed every weeks. Longer styles can be trimmed every weeks, though long locks may develop split ends or other damage that could require more frequent trimming. It is also advisable to change to a new style gradually. Someone with very long hair may want to try a medium style before progressing to a very short haircut to get used to the new look. Home or Salon Haircuts Many people choose to have their hair cut at a beauty salon because professional stylists can easily adapt different styles for a variety of face shapes, hair lengths, and individual preferences. It is not wise to attempt to cut your own hair. How you angle your head to reach different strands will affect the curve of the cut with potentially disastrous results. Enlist an assistant and explain carefully the type of simple cut you would like. Draw a picture or show a photograph of the desired haircut. Take all the same steps a stylist would. Wash your hair thoroughly first, and cut it when it is wet. After each snip, use a comb or brush to even out the remaining strands and line them up with the new ends for a flawless finish. Learn How to Cut Hair If you opt to try hair cutting at home, many resources offer step-by-step instructions. Watching a video that outlines the process is a great way to learn how to cut hair. You have a choice between paid and free instructions. Paid Resources A small investment in reliable hair cutting instructions can pay off very quickly. If you prefer to have professional guidance, you may want to pay for print material or videos. Some paid resources include: Scissors and Comb Haircutting: Check with your local community college for noncredit hair cutting courses; some colleges will create a class if enough people inquire about a particular topic. You can also try an online cosmetology class. Free Resources Many videos with instructions are readily available for viewing online at no cost, and they cover a wide range of topics:
