The series of HATCHET books forms a trilogy from the year , with this book, Spectre, being number 2 in the series.

It was pulled mid run from theaters from AMC who cited "poor performance" at the box office. But the horror-sphere will argue that releasing an uncut, unrated and uncensored version of the movie in theaters was a huge gamble by Dark Sky Films and AMC and it was pulled because it contained too much exteeminess, gore and splatter. Arguments aside Hatchet 2 deserved at least a decent theatrical run to prove old school American horror can survive theatrically. When all that floods US theaters are PG 3D CGI kills snoozefests, one can only wonder if the 80s inspired slasher films can survive in this climate. But on the merit of a horror film, Hatchet 2 is a sequel that literally starts off where the last one ended. Everything about Hatchet 2 follows the sequel formula to a tee. Hunters abound in the sequel and all hell breaks loose. Hatchet 2 is an unapologetic splatter slasher flick that says "Fuck You" to the other horror movies of Victor Crowley slaughtered his way into a great rookie season in the original. Here he gives more of the same. I might as well go with my same review formula to. Awesome Review-O-Matic If you are any kind of horror fan, you will appreciate Hatchet 2 for what it is. A fun, goofy gorefest slasher film. If you missed it, here are a couple. Below is a list of what we here at the jaded viewer deem as full of chunky gooiness when it comes to the ingredients of a solid slasher-palooza. Does Hatchet 2 achieve everything on this list? Does the movie have Gratuitous, over the top, super fleshy nudity? Plus we get a cameo from our former Buffy the Vampire Slayer cast member. Stereotypical teenage caricatures with a few old people who die gruesome and horrific over the top deaths? Old people dying is fun. Kills by our slasher that make you go "Fuck yeah! Gore, lots of it. Like serious decapitation, dismemberment, impalement, hatchet frenzy steroid rages and blood shooting out at various penetration wounds, limbs a flailing and mindless splatter and mayhem? I especially enjoyed the double saw as well as the hatchet in the vagina kill. Parry Shen has now been killed twice and both were solid. A few fodder victims never believe the legend and get to meet good ole Vic up close in person. Hot girl Marybeth takes charge and Danielle Harris does a great job in being the final girl. Her Southern drawl accent came and went but I let it go. Her uber hotness and cuteness negates any "bad acting". Parry Shen is hilarious as Justin, twin brother of Shawn from the first movie. I like how he had the faux goatee like he was the evil twin. Tony Todd plays creep Rev. Zombie who knows how to kill Crowley. But his theory is as good as looking it up on Wikipedia. We get a token black guy making token black guy funnies that come out flat. Gratuitous cameos by actors who have portrayed horror legends Candyman, Freddy Kreuger and Jason Voorhees that make you flash a metal sign and do the Beavis and Butthead pseudo head nodding. This is fuckin awesome!!!! Wildly ambiguous ending that can be used to warrant a sequel? But the on screen kills were all top notch and quite creative. And at the end of the day, your going to watch Hatchet 2 to see those gallons of blood tossed on a tree. Hatchet 2 is old school American horror.

Fiskars touts the new X-series as having a number of improvements over the older versions of Fiskars axes and hatchets, such as: Better Balance Improved Chopping Performance A Hardened Bit with a hardness of 55 RC info lifted from a reseller of the new Gerber II series axes which are rebranded Fiskars X-Series axes and hatchets Revised handle with rubberization to improve comfort and grip retention The X7 also has a newer style plastic sheath. It seems much sturdier than the older plastic holders which fell apart after awhile. The newer plastic model appears to be a permanent sheath solution. Here are the specs I measured on new vs old: Fiskars X7 Weight- Also, the metal from the axe head flares out more to protect the plastic during splitting chores compared to the older model. Please note, the brighter metal along the edge is not from chopping but from my sharpening job with sandpaper and leather strop Older Fiskars hatchet showing closeup of wider Scandi grind and shallower transition between metal hatchet head and plastic: Side by side comparison X7 on left, older model on right. Also note the larger hammer poll on the newer X7, which improves the balance and the ease of camp chores like pounding tent stakes, etc. Side by side comparison of profile of the two X7 is on the left. Aside from changes in the cutting edge angle and the increased head size and weight, I see no major changes here other than a slightly steeper angle on the head leading towards the cutting edge. I chose this hatchet over the lighter Gransfors Bruks Wildlife Hatchet because it is closer in size to the X7, including head weight within 0. In fact, the X7 and Wetterlings are so closely matched that the Wetterlings sheath fit almost perfectly on the X7! I felt that if this hatchet could best the heavier Wetterlings, it was a given that it would easily trounce the lighter Gransfors Wildlife Hatchet. Now, on to the performance! To measure performance, I conducted two tests, making feathersticks and chopping logs. In making feathersticks, I really thought the Wetterlings would beat the X7, but to my surprise, the X7 carved a little easier. Featherstick made with the X7: Featherstick made with the Wetterlings: Much heavier than the Douglas Fir and Pine that normally grows up here. This is 25 chops into it with my trusty Wetterlings hatchet: And 25 chops with the X7. I was amazed that this crazy Star Wars looking hatchet could chop so well. Huge wood chunks flew, almost like when I chop with my 19" Wetterlings bushcraft axe! The edge has stayed perfect and is still super sharp. As far as shaping wood for bushcraft tasks was concerned, i. This was another surprise. As for the feel of the X7, it is much more comfortable with the new shape and rubberized handle. The rubberized handle portion reduces shock in addition to adding grip, so I think Fiskars hit a home run with this change. Was this review helpful? Besides the members of the class, there were present President Needham, me professors, Mr. Clark, president of the Freshman class. About nine-thirty all were seated at the tables and vice-president Fitz Gerald arose to announce that he was in the position of one having greatness thrust upon him, since President Lundy was unable to be present on account of illness, and introduced President Needham as the first speaker. Needham made one of the strongest and most thoughtful talks that it has ever been the fortune of the class to hear from him. Dean Vance followed him with several striking jokes of incidents "down in Virginia," and showed that the sphere of usefulness of the lawyer was second to none in the world. Professor Peter was of the opinion that "working up a case" could be looked at in several lights, from an "ambulance chaser" to the hard-working lawyer who pours over his books late at night. Professor Lorenzen, just back from Cuba, showed clearly the main differences between legal procedure in Cuba and in the States. Clark for the First Year class and Mr. West for the Second Year acquitted themselves most worthily of their responsibility as representatives of their classes, and made good impressions.
