After hours of contemplating, he decided to take a nap in the recharge pod for 30 minutes. The class looks different. Ezra looks around the class and it seems like it has been abandoned for a very long time. Everything was scattered on the floor, papers, materials, equipment, you name it. Suddenly, he Ezra finds it hard to breath and his head was getting heavier as minutes went by. He collapsed on to the floor and felt like fainting until he woke up. After a while, Ezra regains consciousness and felt his strength coming back to him. He stood up and expressed his gratitude to the mysterious man. Ezra asked for his name, but he received no reply. When they both got out of the building, Ezra was shocked. Not only Block E, but the whole area looked like it was hit by a nuclear bomb, leaving all in the ruins. The hill that was once covered with lush greenery is nothing more than a stone hill, slowly eroding away by the force of nature. The air was stale, smoky and suffocating. Without the mask, Ezra knows he would not last for 30 minutes. There were no birds flying in the sky. In fact, everything was quiet around. No sound, nobody in sight. It was like a war has been waged and everyone paid the price. Next, Ezra was taken to a lake. The water was brown and tainted. It was full of rubbish. Fishes were dead, floating on the surface of the water, amongst the sea of trash. He understands that architects shape the world literally and figuratively and he was really determined to return to his time and fix things to make them right. Ezra and RN97 returned to block E, when the recharge pod was situated. It was time for Ezra to go venture back in time. He thanked RN97 and gestured goodbye. He lied down in the recharge pod. Closed his eyes shut and slowly fell into a lullaby. Once again, he looked at his phone. He was back in time. He looked around, everything was back to normal. The studio was clean and arranged. His works are still on the table, exactly where he left them. Fueled by motivation to achieve great things, he jumped off the pod and onto the floor. Hurriedly went to his work and starts sketching. Prologue We return back to the future, to the time when Ezra was returning back to his time. Once he disappeared from that universe, RN97 takes off his mask and wiped his tears off his cheeks. He entrusted his goals to restore the nature to his younger self. Good ideas will come at unexpected time. Skins are blanketed with goose bumps. Printing shop closes at midnight and time is quickly running out. I looked around and I see my classmates, comrades, working diligently on their projects. I chuckled to myself. A quick glimpse and they look like a zombie, lifeless and miserable. Stomach grumbling, demanding a hot plated meal served with cold beverage. The best I can do is the biscuits I bought from the convenience store earlier. With the dimensions in head, I carefully cut the modeling board; making use of everything I have, fearing the resources will not be enough. Restocking the ammunitions at 5am would be impossible. After scavenging around the class, I stumbled across an unnamed and unattended used modeling board lying on the floor. I looked left and right, to make sure no one was looking before picking it up. Dream Studio 7 Once again, my stomach is protesting against famine. I forced myself to run on an empty stomach and finally woke up. My comrades, were already in line to get their boards printed and I had to wait for my turn to come. I printed my boards and hurried off to class. I was late and once again. I wanted to pin up but all the pin up panels are occupied. I started presenting and by the time I realized it, smiles were gleaming off the lecturers face. I can proceed to external crit with minimal alterations. The battle has been fought. I looked around the studio. It looked like a battlefield. Some of my comrades were victorious, others were left battered, drenched in blood of their own. Victorious or not, we rewarded ourselves with a well-deserved good night sleep and meals fit for kings.
